JONES CHARGES A REPUBLICAN PLOT TO BEAT GOV. FOSS

Head of Commonwealth Shoe Company Says Frothingham Men Are Playing on Fears of Manufacturers on Tariff Issue

Canvasser Sent Among Leaders Securing Signatures for Republican Nominee, so That Industry "May Be Saved"

PAY ENVELOPE POLITICS

Employes of the George E. Keith Company reported last night that when the pay envelopes at the factories of the firm were passed out Friday they were accompanied by a Republican circular. It was the subject of comment in the street and in the labor office and halls.—From Yesterday's Brockton Enterprise.

A Republican plot to secure the endorsement of Louis A. Frothingham for Governor, by the shoe manufacturers is revealed in a letter sent yesterday to John F. McDonald, chairman of the Democratic State committee, by Charles H. Jones, head of the Commonwealth Shoe & Leather Company, at Lynn.

Mr. Jones is one of the largest manufacturers of boots and shoes in New England and has long been known as a progressive. He was one of the most active opponents of the merger of the Boston & Maine and the New Haven Railroads. He also has been active in fighting the exactions of the United Shoe Machinery Trust, which he claims is stifling the shoe industry of New England.

Mr. Jones, in his letter to Mr. McDonald, says:

I feel obliged to call your attention to some happenings in the shoe trade in relation to the coming election. Shoe manufacturers and shoe workers are practically unanimous in their desire to preserve the present low rate of protection on shoes. The leaders of the Republican party in this State have taken advantage of this feeling to urge them to vote for Frothingham as the only means of making their protest against free shoes effective.

A few days ago a meeting of an important trade organization was called to consider this question, and at that meeting a leading Republican of the State was present and suggested that the manufacturers organize and collect a fund for advertising throughout the shoe centres of the State, that the safety of the industry depended on the election of Mr. Frothingham. After consultation, the shoe men present were obliged to conclude that the industry was not a partisan one, but contained within its ranks members of both important political parties, and that no such action as that desired could be taken by them as a trade body, and the incident was then thought to have been closed.

This noon a petition was handed me for signature, setting forth in substance that the signers called upon shoe workers and the manufacturers generally to support Frothingham in the interests of continued tariff protection on shoes. The gentleman who presented the petition asked me to expect all shoe manufacturers to sign it without objection, as he stated Governor Foss was in favor of the repeal of the tariff on shoes, which, in his opinion, meant the destruction of the industry.

As the names attached to these petitions will probably be published to influence voters next Tuesday, I have felt obliged to acquaint you with these facts, and perhaps may be excused if I state the cavalierish way which has been upon me during the past ten days, that if shoe workers desire to prevent free shoes, they must vote for Governor Foss.

From the lips of all the Republican leaders we have learned of the hostility recently displayed against New England industries by Representatives from the South and West.

There can be no doubt but this hostility exists. Would it not have been the part of statesmanship for our Republican leaders to take us into their confidence and tell us why the South and West desire to punish New England industries at this time? They all know perfectly well, and the reason is simply this, that there is a deep and widespread feeling that New England's representatives in Congress have allowed their manufacturers to dictate the rates of duty levied on their products, with the result that the manufacturers have reaped a golden harvest from the excessive protection accorded them, and that the people at large have, for many years, been obliged to pay the bill in the increased cost of commodities. Who is responsible for this? Clearly no one but the men Mr. Frothingham is supposed to represent.

SPEAKING OF RECORDS.

During the making of the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill there were 129 votes in the United States Senate. On these roll-calls, the record of Henry Cabot Lodge, Boss of the Republican machine in Massachusetts, was this:

Voted WITH Aldrich 102.
Paired or not voting, 26.
Voted AGAINST Aldrich, 1.

N. White Doesn't Love Governor Foss, But--

Norman Is Willing to Admit, Just the Same, That It Might Be Worse.

Norman H. White of Brookline is said to be one of the thousands of Republicans in Massachusetts who do not regard the coming election of Governor Foss as in any way a serious blow at the peace, progress and prosperity of Massachusetts.

At the Adams House yesterday the Brookline Progressive was said to have expressed himself there on Friday night as follows:

"The re-election of Governor Foss will mean that we will have laws made by the free exercise of those chosen to make them. Under the machine Republican domination of to-day this is impossible. I have little use personally for Governor Foss, but if he is to be the instrument for us to secure free and untrammelled legislation and to dethrone the Republican bosses of the State, then I say we can gladly put up with him for Governor again."

Mr. White received with Speaker Walker, the votes of 47,000 Republicans in the primaries. He has a large following of Progressive Republicans.

STUDIES MERRY-GO-ROUND.

Tech's New Apparatus for Solving Riddles.

The merry-go-round has become a scientific apparatus, contributing its quota of information to technical lore. R. C. Riley, one of the assistant instructors at Tech, has just taken a ride of thirty miles an hour on the whirling table which Worcester Polytechnic has established on a rock in Chaffins Pond, five miles from Worcester.

This table is really more like a derrick than the regular beach merry-go-round, as the object of the apparatus is simply to measure speed instead of to carry many passengers for commercial purposes. It is used in experiments like testing the thrust of propellors for airships and for similar gauging of air forces.

MELLEN HOST AT DINNER.

Entertains Parts of Railroad Men at Stockbridge Estate.

STOCKBRIDGE, Nov. 4.—President Charles S. Mellen of the New Haven railroad gave a dinner to a party of railroad men to-night at his country estate, "Council Grove." The party arrived on President Mellen's private car, the Connecticut. The afternoon was spent in inspecting the estate. The party consisted of William Skinner, Benjamin Campbell, James Brady, known as "Diamond Jim" Brady, all of New York; Henry A. Fabian of Boston, Samuel Hemingway of New Haven and Ralph S. Gillett, President Mellen's trolley line promoter in Connecticut.

TWENTIETH CENTURY HISSES MR. B. MARSH

New Yorker Had Suggested Feeble-Minded Homes for Charity Directors.

MR. DAVIES LED THE KICK

Marsh, Unperturbed, Proposes "Overseers of the Idle Rich"; Mr. Dole Pours Oil.

Benjamin C. Marsh, executive secretary of the Committee on Population of New York, caused a flurry of excitement at the Twentieth Century Club yesterday afternoon when he declared that the idle rich of Boston needed attendants as well as the idle poor.

He also elicited a hiss when he declared that many of the directors of charitable organizations should be sent to the Feeble-Minded Institute. The hiss, however, did not perturb the speaker, for he said that he had gained the information he was imparting through actual experience as a tramp.

Humphreys Davies leaped to his feet, following Mr. Marsh, and asserted that the speaker's characterization of Boston charities was scurrilous. The Rev. Charles F. Dole, the chairman, poured oil on the troubled waters by remarking that criticism such as they had received might do them all good.

Was a Tramp in Boston.

Mr. Marsh told a graphic story of how he had been a beggar and a tramp in Boston and other cities. Among other things in this characteristic address, he said:

"I don't know how it was that I escaped the police in Boston when I was playing my part as a vagrant, and learning how this city dealt with homeless men.

"Then I came here again, and made a raid with the police on your charity lodging houses. I remember one case in particular when the officer made all the tramps stand up. One fellow had a glove on, and the policeman made him take it off, exclaiming that the game would not work. The idea was that the man was concealing his hand which denoted the absence of any job to work on. Then the policeman treated the hobo to some of the 'manual movement' with his club.

"Another thing. Take that poor farm of yours at Bridgewater for instance. What does it amount to? You put a fellow in there because he does not work and you call him a vagrant, but what have you done to give him work and how can you give him work when your land values are not reckoned in the right way?

"Why, if you are really honest in Boston, you will have overseers of the rich, as well as of the poor. You will force the police to go into the homes of the rich and to find out who there is working.

"You must put the rich on the same basis as the tramp. You tell a man that he ought to work, and what do you do to help him get work? If a man says he wants to work on land and till it, you shut him down and send him finally to the State farm.

Treatment for Directors.

"The donors of our big charities own the land, and these very persons who own that land are put into positions of directors of our charities. Let me say to you, as far as my experience goes, that many directors of charitable organizations should be sent to some feeble-minded institute or to a place where reformed charities are underway."

This remark was followed with a hiss.

"This does not unnerve me," declared Mr. Marsh.

"You have legalized robbery right here in New England, and let me tell you that the real estate interests are often identified with charity interests.

When Mr. Marsh sat down Humphreys Davies called upon the chairman, Rev. Charles F. Dole, for permission to say a word.

"I protest against the scurrilous attack upon our Boston charities, which we have just heard," he said. His remarks were applauded. Then Rev. Mr. Dole, in a dignified manner, said:

"If any guest, the speaker, had put some of his remarks with an interrogation mark, he would have been more persuasive in his speech. But the fact is right here, it is good for us to be criticised. There may be something in this criticism."

PASTORAL LETTER FROM NEW CARDINAL

Honor That Came to Him, He Says, Due to the Merits of His Flock.

TRIBUTE TO THE FATHERS

Asks To-day That Priests and People Pray for Him at Their Altars.

The following address from Cardinal O'Connell to the clergy and the laity of the archdiocese of Boston will be read to-day at all the masses in each of the Catholic churches of the archdiocese:

WILLIAM
By the grace of God and of the Apostolic See,
ARCHBISHOP OF BOSTON
To the Reverend Clergy and People of the Diocese, Health and Benediction:

You are already aware that the Vicar of Christ, Pius the Tenth, has decided to raise to the exalted cardinalate of Holy Roman Church, the Archbishop of this beloved See of Boston.

To be ranked among the princes of the Church; to be exalted to the sublime Senate of the Pope; to take station among those great and holy men chosen from historic Sees and selected from among the most pious and learned in the whole christian Commonwealth; to partake of the historic glory of those who in every age of this Church has been raised by him, who for us holds Christ's place on earth. The greatest and highest proof of affection from the best and most powerful of earthly sovereigns is given into these weak hands of mine to treasure and to guard and defend, if necessary, even to the pouring out of my life blood.

In the full possession of all this glory and honor before God and the whole world you, beloved children, have more than share for shares. Upon you, through your faith, your unfaltering loyalty to Holy Church, your undying attachment to the See of Peter, your splendid generosity, even to sacrifice, upon you this sovereign dignity descends. To me it has come only through your merits and your works—yours and those, too, of our fathers in the faith and in the flesh, valiant champions of the church, holy prelates, zealous priests, and saintly parents of this Church of Boston, who in their tears and suffering and labor, reared the fold which to-day is lifted up before the whole Christian world to highest honor.

No wonder your hearts are stirred to the depths with holy joy. No wonder the echoes of your jubilee have already reached beyond the sea to the Throne of the Fisherman. Never before has this fair and powerful city received such world-wide distinction as in her enrollment among the principalities which govern three hundred millions of souls the whole world over.

Even in the smallest hamlet of the farthest East to-day Boston is known as never before, honored as never before. And every lover of our noble and historic city is a debtor to you for Truth for this invaluable benefit conferred upon her name. Once more the perpetual youth of Christ's Church is demonstrated in this rejuvenation of her electors. Once again the splendid democracy of her constitution is revealed, since upon the humblest she places the crown of the princes of her people. Once again, and this time more than ever the oldest monarchy takes the young western republic into the very intimacy of her noble family and into her centuries-old halls of sacred council and government. Avis Linnell's Suicide Threat Defence Has Big Surprise

Richeson's Fiancee Found

VIOLET EDMANDS IS AT POMFRET, CT.

Overcome by Severe Ordeal Is Accompanied by Mother in Out of Way Village,

MINISTER TO TAKE STAND

THE attorneys representing the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, who was indicted for the murder of Avis Linnell, have in their possession, it was declared last night, a letter written by the girl to the clergyman in which she declared that if he did not marry her she would commit suicide with poison.

This important development in the great poison murder mystery was followed last night by the discovery that Miss Violet Edmands, the Brookline heiress to whom Richeson was to have been married last Tuesday, is with her mother and a nurse at Pomfret, a fashionable town, near Putnam, Conn.

Richeson's lawyers have the letter as reported it would in a measure account for the confidence they have expressed in the innocence of the accused clergyman and their certainty that he will be acquitted of the fearful crime with which he is charged.

Believe Letter Was Taken.

Even before Richeson was arrested at the home of Miss Edmands a detective firm in Boston had been employed to look after his interests, and when the police visited Richeson's room at the home of the Carters in Magazine street, Cambridge, they learned that some one had been there before they got there.

District Attorney Pelletier announced Robert Burns, the head of the detective agency working for Richeson, before the Grand Jury and Richeson lawyers charged that the District Attorney tried to make Burns tell what he got in Richeson's room. Burns declined to talk and Mr. Pelletier declared that he could do matter.

It is believed that one of the things that Burns carried away from the Carter house was the letter mentioned in which it is said Avis Linnell threatened suicide. This is said to be an extract from the letter:

"Unless you marry me I will take poison and kill myself."

Even Dr. Leary, the medical examiner, believed that it was a case of suicide when he first viewed the body of the dead choir singer. It may be readily seen what a strong card such a letter would be in Richeson's defence if it were produced at his trial.

Edmands at Pomfret.

The police declare, however, that there was every evidence by certain preparations that Avis Linnell had made in her room at the Young Women's Christian Association in Boston that the girl did not contemplate killing herself, but that she took the deadly crystals of potassium believing that it was a medicine.

None of the lawyers connected with the case would say a word last night about the alleged letter. The police would not discuss the case in any shape.

Miss Edmands, following a severe illness from the shock that followed the Linnell tragedy, and the arrest at her home of her fiance, left Boston a week ago, accompanied by her mother and a nurse. Their destination was kept secret. The Edmands family physician said that Miss Edmands had gone away for quiet and rest.

The young woman and her mother are quartered in comfortable rooms in the Matthewson cottage, which is conducted in connection with the Ben Greenfield Hotel. It was said last night that Miss Edmands had been very ill since she went to Connecticut and that her mother, also, had been under the care of a physician.

BURGLAR CHASE ON BEACON STREET

Former Employe of Pickman Family Taken for Attempt to Break In.

Theodore Hanson, 42 years old, was arrested in the yard of the Dudley L. Pickman residence at No. 96 Beacon street, at 2:30 o'clock this morning, after he had aroused the servants by breaking through a pantry window and was about to make a getaway by climbing over the garden wall.

Hanson three years ago was in the employ of the Pickman family as a man of all work. He was formerly a ranger in the navy.

The arrest was made by Policemen Joyce and Hurley of Station 4 in Joy street. Hanson told them his name was "Wilson." He was identified by the police as a former fellow-servant.

The prisoner said further that he was accompanied on the job by another man. He was sure the other man was still in the house. Policemen from Joy street and the Back Bay began a thorough search of the building.

The arrival of patrol wagons from the Back Bay and the Joy street stations, together with the female cries of the servants from upper windows, aroused the entire neighborhood.

The Pickmans were away from home, but there were plenty of the neighbors at home and the burglar limit was watched from the windows of the Samuel E. Guild, Mrs. James H. Beal, Mrs. Jacob Pratt, J. Templeton Coolidge, Jr., Charles A. Kidder, F. H. Sears, Jr. and Dr. J. W. Elliot houses. Beacon street hasn't seen such a to-do in years.

A new roadbower is in the course of construction at No. 96 Beacon street. Hanson entered the premises and helped himself up to a pole. With the aid of the pole he scaled the wall from Back street, facing the Charles River esplanade.

The servants appear to have been awakened by the crash of glass in the pantry. Three of them fainted away. The fourth sprang to the telephone and called police headquarters. Headquarters sent the message to the Joy Street and Back Bay station. The men from Joy street were first on the ground and Beal over the wall. Hanson was caught almost immediately. The pole that had helped him in, aided in his prompt arrest, attracting the attention of Joyce and Hurley. Hanson had not had time to accumulate any booty.

FATHER KILLS 2 CHILDREN AND SELF

Ludwig Jaeger, German Consular Official, Follows Ex-Wife from Chicago and Triple Tragedy Follows on Beach

Discovers His Little Girls, Five and Four, Walking by the Sea, Lures Them with Candy and Ends Lives of All with Pistol

Mother, Who Is Married Again, Is Nearly Crazed with Grief When Notified of the Shooting of Her Two Little Ones

AFTER winning the trust of his two little girls, Olive and Anita, with kisses and promises of candy and cakes, Ludwig W. Jaeger of Chicago took them hand-in-hand down over the sea wall at Winthrop Crest yesterday noon, shot them, and then shot himself. Olive was five years old and Anita four.

Father and children died soon afterward in the Metcalf Hospital, Winthrop Centre.

Jaeger was the son of a German monk who had renounced his vows and married a Syrian princess. He was educated at Heidelberg. Coming to this country, he married a Chicago girl. Last year Mrs. Jaeger divorced her husband for cruelty and secured the custody of the children. Later Mrs. Jaeger married Frank Strassburger and came with him and the children to Winthrop two months ago.

Jaeger came to Winthrop ten days ago, found the Strassburgers and secured their consent to see his children. The insanity which he inherited from his royal Syrian mother, who died in a German madhouse, took the form of convincing him that he must kill the children and himself.

That the double murder and suicide were premeditated is shown by a letter found on Jaeger, dated last Wednesday, and reading thus:

"I Am Going to Heaven."

"I am going to Heaven and I want to take my children with me. I have left $250 to bury us. I want the Hamburg-American line to cremate our bodies and throw the ashes overboard in mid-Atlantic. Chicago people testified untruthfully that my wife, at our divorce. What they said was false and put me in a hole. I hope I have strength to carry this out. I couldn't bear to leave the children behind. I do hate to leave them so. I am going to take them along with me.

The triple tragedy, especially the murder of the innocent children, shocked all Winthrop beyond expression. Utmost sympathy is felt for Mrs. Strassburger, who is now under medical care.

The agonized mother, when told at the hospital that both children were dead, burst into a passion of sobs and shrieks. She cried:

"My babies, my babies, I have no babies now."

Her hysteria became so acute that it was necessary to administer an opiate to quiet her. Mr. Strassburger, step-father of the slain children, was in Lawrence yesterday. He arrived home at 6 o'clock to learn the news of the tragedy which had blighted the little household.

According to the story which Jaeger told Mrs. E. L. Moore of No. 37 Dolphin avenue, Winthrop, where he engaged a room ten days ago, his father was a German monk who left the monastic order, married a Syrian princess and became a lawyer at Strasburg. The father is now connected with the Imperial Law Department of Germany.

wife. I never thought he would do any horrible thing like this. I knew them in Chicago before their divorces. Mrs. Jaeger secured her divorce over a year ago. A few months ago she became Mrs. Strasburger. We came to Boston to live a few months ago and settled in Winthrop.

"The first we knew of Jaeger being in the East was about a week ago, when we received a letter from him. He wrote my wife, asking if he could see her. I was away then. Mrs. Strasburger made an appointment for him to call when I should be home. He came. I was present. He asked if he could see the children when he wished. He said: 'This separation from the children is killing me.' I told him that if he would put that request in writing, I would grant it. He wrote a formal request and I replied, saying he could see the children and talk with them. He came to see them and took them walking three times. I knew nothing of so-day's terrible happenings till I arrived home tonight."

Says He Loved His Wife.

A few days ago Jaeger told Mrs. Moore his life-story. When he came to the Chicago divorce he said that false witnesses turned the case against him. He protested that he always loved his wife. He told Mrs. Moore he could not bear to be separated from the children. He also made this strange remark: "Whatever I do I do for the best." That this was the half-spoken intent of a crazed brain Mrs. Moore never suspected.

Jaeger told Mrs. Moore yesterday morning he was not feeling well. He said: "I don't know how much longer I can stand this."

He was in the Moore kitchen at the time, waiting for his breakfast of eggs. He had risen late. It was 11 o'clock. He was in his shirtsleeves. Just then, from the window, he espied his children playing in the yard of the Forrest Apartments.

On account of Mrs. Strasburger's pitiful condition it could not be learned in detail yesterday just how she came to let the children out yesterday morning from the house. It is said by neighbors that the little ones teased to go out. One report was that Mrs. Strasburger said to them:

"Yes, you may go out in the yard and play, but don't go away."

When Jaeger saw the children he rushed from the house and into the yard where the children were. He picked up Olive and kissed her frantically. Then he kissed and caressed Anita. He spoke to them in their native German, which the children spoke habitually, knowing only a little English.

Fired Four Shots.

Then the father took Olive by the hand and started out of the yard with her, Anita following closely. He led the children toward the seawall, stopped, left them, started back toward the Moore house, then returned to the children and took them down the steps leading from the shore drive to the rocks and beach below. That was the last Mrs. Moore saw of them.

Less than five minutes later four shots rang out sharp and loud on the clear air. At that time Sanford Eldridge, driver in the Winthrop Fire Department, was exercising horses along the shore drive. He hurried to Boulevard beach, arriving there about the same time as Louis Gutterman of the Boulevard Hotel and Patrolman MacDonald of the Winthrop police.

They found Jaeger lying unconscious on the rocks just below the seawall. On either side were the children, unconscious. All were bleeding from bullet wounds in the head.

The father and children were taken immediately to Dr. B. H. Metcalf's Hospital in Winthrop Centre. Anita, the youngest, died in a few minutes after she was taken to the hospital. Olive lived for half an hour. The father lingered till 2 o'clock. None recovered consciousness.

The wound that Jaeger had fired one shot at Olive, two at Anita and the fourth at himself. All four took effect. The bullets were fired from a 32-calibre Colt's automatic revolver which was found near by. The father evidently carried the revolver with him in his tumbler he did not go back into the house for it when he left Mrs. Moore's for the last time to go take the children on their fatal walk down the beach.

Children Spoke Only German.

The noise of the shots roused the Crest neighborhood and word came soon to Mrs. Strasburger. Accompanied by Mrs. W. Carter, another tenant of the Forrest, Mrs. Carter, another tenant of the Forrest, Strasburger hurried to the hospital, only to learn that both children were dead.

The agonized mother never asked about the father. Her thoughts were all for the children. She was dissuaded from her wishes to see the pitiful little bodies at that time, and was finally taken home, where opiates were given her to quiet her. She reproached herself for letting the crazed father see the children at all. She wailed again and again that she could never have suspected such a horrible outcome of her well-meant kindness to the man she had divorced.

Only a few days before Mrs. Strasburger had told Mrs. Carter she thought it was her duty to let Jaeger see his own children.

"He cannot bear to be separated from them," she told Mrs. Carter, "I suppose he lived in Strasburg, Germany. He married a rich little princess, a woman as beautiful if should let him see them once in a while. They are his own children, you know. He loves them. But I watch them all the time when he is in the yard with them."

The bodies of the father and children were held at the hospital till the medical examiner could view them.

Both Olive and Anita Jaeger were of the purest German type, fair-haired, blue-eyed little ones, who were greatly admired in the Crest neighborhood. Mrs. Strasburger kept them neatly dressed, taking great pride in their appearance. The fact that the little ones spoke only German rather added to the lively interest which the neighbors had in a short time, began to feel to them. They were considered a highly desirable acquisition to the juvenile element of that section.

Promised Them Dolls.

It was recalled after the tragedy that Jaeger had said something to the children the day before about getting them some dollies. The children, not realizing the divorce bonds between their parents, were always glad to see their father. They returned his affection. They had big with the spontaneous affection with which children respond to those whom they trust. He was still "Papa" to them, and God is about harm them was something which they could have been made to realize only by maternal teaching. Mrs. Strasburger, never suspecting the father's insane purpose and loath to keep the man from the little ones he craved, could not find it in her heart to stand between them.

Yet, all the while that Mrs. Strasburger was making it easy for Jaeger to see the children, the man was carrying in his pocket the revolver which was to end their lives and the letter which, to his crazed mind, was to justify his awful act.

Search of Jaeger's room at the Moore house showed all too well that he had come to Winthrop with but one purpose. He brought only a change of underclothing in a suit case.

When Jaeger applied to Mrs. Moore for a room for the Jaegers Mrs. Moore was favorably impressed with his appearance.

"He seemed like a well educated gentleman," said she, "but it was not until two days later that he told me the real reason for his coming here, that he wanted to see his children."

He was the strange story that Jaeger told his landlady:

"My father was a German monk. He renounced his vows for love of a Syrian princess. He left the monastery in which tention to the children he went out and waited for them to appear. That was five or six days ago."

Last Wednesday the deplorable views of Jaeger on religion so worked on Mrs. Moore's mind that she told the Rev. Father J. H. Griffin of the Roman Catholic Church of Winthrop. She asked Father Griffin if he would not come to the house and talk with Jaeger. Father Griffin did call and talked with Jaeger, but was unable to make any particular impression on him.

Yesterday Mrs. Moore noticed that Jaeger was very late in getting downstairs to breakfast.

"It was after 10:30 when he came down," she said, "I was cooking his eggs in the kitchen for him. He was standing by, in his shirt sleeves. Suddenly he spied his children, playing in their little sandgarden in the side yards of the Forrest Apartments. Without a word to me he dashed outdoors and around into the other yard, just as he did once before. The other time he came back soon and I expected him to do so this time. I never suspected the horrible deed he had in mind, and I never dreamed that Olive and Anita would see him again."

It finally left Strasburg and came to America, settling in Chicago. At one time I was connected there with the Spanish consulate. I can speak and write seven languages.

"In Chicago I met a beautiful girl, whom I married. Two children were born to us. I loved my wife more than any woman on earth, even more than my children. She is the handsomest woman I ever saw in Europe or America. I loved my children with equal devotion.

"One and one-half years ago my wife secured a divorce. She accused me of cruelty. Pretending her. That was not true. But, at the trial people testified falsely against me. She secured the decree and custody of the children.

"Recently she married again. She left Chicago with her second husband and the children, and is living in Winthrop. She lives in the Forrest Apartments, right back of us, and her name is Mrs. Frank Strasburger. I have come East to see my children."

Yearned for Her Children.

Up to this point Jaeger's narrative to his landlady was as coherently told as possible. But, when he continued and began to speak of his intense devotion to his children, his talk betrayed signs of extreme mental confusion. He said:

"I can't be separated from my children. No matter what I do, it is for the best. After what has happened in my life, I can't believe there is a God. I want pay a penalty by suffering. I must see my children and I am here to ask my wife to let me see them once in a while."

Mrs. Moore was convinced that Jaeger was drawn to Winthrop by passionate desire to see his own little ones. She was also shocked by his impious declaration that there is no God. Mrs. Moore is a devout Catholic and the idea of any one talked man, especially one of her lodgers, saying a thing like that worried her.

But the lodger acted normally enough in general and told Mrs. Moore later he had made arrangements to see his two girls. A week ago Mrs. Moore saw the children playing in the Forrest apartments and told Jaeger was in the Moore house. The landlady remarked to him: "There are your little girls, Mr. Jaeger."

"Mr. Jaeger was in his shirtsleeves at the time," said Mrs. Moore, yesterday, in relating the incident. "He dashed outdoors, around into the other yard and began kissing the girls. He lifted up one, then the other, and kissed and hugged them. After petting them fondly for a few minutes he came back in the house and ate his breakfast.

"He did not sleep wall nights. I could hear him walking around. He was odd about his meals, too. For breakfast he ate only eggs boiled three seconds. That meant putting them in the boiling water and lifting them right out again.

"The next day after I had called his attention to the children he went out and waited for them to appear. That was five or six days ago."

Last Wednesday the deplorable views of Jaeger on religion so worked on Mrs. Moore's mind that she told the Rev. Father J. H. Griffin of the Roman Catholic Church of Winthrop. She asked Father Griffin if he would not come to the house and talk with Jaeger. Father Griffin did call and talked with Jaeger, but was unable to make any particular impression on him.

Yesterday Mrs. Moore noticed that Jaeger was very late in getting downstairs to breakfast.

"It was after 10:30 when he came down," she said, "I was cooking his eggs in the kitchen for him. He was standing by, in his shirt sleeves. Suddenly he spied his children, playing in their little sandgarden in the side yards of the Forrest Apartments. Without a word to me he dashed outdoors and around into the other yard, just as he did once before. The other time he came back soon and I expected him to do so this time. I never suspected the horrible deed he had in mind, and I never dreamed that Olive and Anita would see him again."

It finally left Strasburg and came to America, settling in Chicago. At one time I was connected there with the Spanish consulate. I can speak and write seven languages.

"In Chicago I met a beautiful girl, whom I married. Two children were born to us. I loved my wife more than any woman on earth, even more than my children. She is the handsomest woman I ever saw in Europe or America. I loved my children with equal devotion.

"One and one-half years ago my wife secured a divorce. She accused me of cruelty. That was not true. But, at the trial people testified falsely against me. She secured the decree and custody of the children.

MISS FARRAR ALSO SANG SOME SONGS

But Her Truly Wonderful Voice Is an Old Story, While Her Gown Was New.

Pinky-pink and curres.

That was what Geraldine Farar made you think of yesterday afternoon as she bowed and bowed and hamlied and smiled her way to the front platform to the tune of ovation in Symphony Hall. Miss Farrar worn clinging pink stain, which shimmered soft and warm about her round arms, and her bare pink neck and shoulders.

A Biet of dark hair yelling—illusion, they call it—banded her dark hair, and spread out in a quaint fan behind to outline the great chignon. The mear blue of her eyes melted into the darker blue of her headdress, making a mysterious shaved tissue about her face above the brilliance of the yellow footlights, which bent upon her shimmering gown

The somberly dressed Symphony orchestra, sitting in their white wood chairs, and the grant black grand piano, were an effective background for the singer as she leaned back against a great bunch of American beauties, tied with vivid crimson ribbon, which hung down over the edge of the piano against her pink robe Miss Farrar was assisted by Edmond Clement, the tenor, whose voice suits hers most admirably. The best of the program were the duets. They sang to a packed house, with every seat taken. Men and women, young and old, stood there, deaf all about the edge of the great orchestra floor. It was announced as Miss Farrar's only appearance in Boston this year.

THREE WOMEN SUE OVER DIVORCED MAN

DETROIT, Nov. 4.—Because Madeline Clements Warner is said to have called Mrs. Blanche Peck Wanner crazy, a suit for $30,000 for slander was started in the Circuit Court and another suit for $50,000 has been started against Mrs. Lucile Clements because she is alleged to have agreed with her daughter. It is the seventh suit started among the three women in their fight over Charles Wanner, Detroit man recently divorced from Mrs. Peck Wanner, and who married Madeline Clements, a society belle of Bay City and Detroit, in New York two months ago. The damages in the seven suits aggregate $650,000.

DOUBLE LEGAL STAMPS FORENOONS

FR. SHERMAN, NOTED JESUIT, IN HOSPITAL

Son of Famous Civil War General Under Care of Dr. Steadman at Brookline.

Rev. Thomas Ewing Sherman, S. J., son of the late General William Tecumseh Sherman, has been committed to the private asylum of Dr. Henry Stedman at Brookline by Judge Charles F. Perkins of the Brookline Municipal Court. Application for his detention was made by a relative whose name does not appear in the case. The petition was signed by a relative and two physicians.

Few clergymen of the country gained to such an extent the goodwill of Protestants and Catholics alike as Father Sherman. He was loved by members of every denomination.

It was in the year after the Spanish-American war that Father Sherman appeared as the defendant of the priests of Porto Rico. He was the chaplain of the Fourth Missouri Volunteers, and later post chaplain, detached, at San Juan. This duty lasted through 1898 and 1899. His opportunities for extensive and thorough study of conditions in Porto Rico were great and his contributions to literature on the subject were widely read and were authoritative.

Defends Porto Ricans.

Father Sherman became a famous missionary lecturer, and his missions were popular and well-attended wherever he preached. He was for years agent of the Catholic Truth Society of Chicago. His work endeared him to the hearts of thousands and his kindness made him friends in all religions. As an orator he ranked with the best, and those who attended his missions were always certain to be rewarded with pulpit eloquence of sterling excellence.

Several years ago in writing of the so-called Emmanuel movement, Father Sherman declared that the Emmanuel believers were just beginning to grasp and make familiar to the Catholics for centuries past. Prior to his statement, Rev. Elwood Worcester, a leader in the Emmanuel movement, had expressed his belief that in the confessional the Roman Catholic Church had provided its children with a channel for mental healing which it would be well for non-Catholics to possess.

"The church has had and used the same method of healing through the mind for hundreds of years," wrote Father Sherman. "Our confessional takes the place of suggestion. Ever since I was seven years old I have relieved myself of mental troubles in confession. The great interest with which the people of America are receiving the Emmanuel movement shows their desire for a more adequate religion, one which soothes the mind as body and mind."

Won Degree at Yale.

As were the rest of the children of the great Civil War commander, Father Sherman was baptized a Catholic at his birth. He was brought up in the faith of his mother's family, the Ewings of Ohio.

Father Sherman was born in San Francisco, October 12, 1856. He received his A. B. at Georgetown University in 1874. Two years later he won the degree of B. S. at Yale, and received an LL. B. at Washington University, St. Louis, in 1879. He studied theology at Woodstock College in Maryland for six years, and was ordained in 1889. He conducted the burial service at General Sherman's funeral, being the family host. His brother is Philemon Tecumseh Sherman, lawyer and labor commissioner of New York.

GIVES TALK ON COLUMBUS.

Charles H. Farrell Addresses the Catholic Union.

The first members' night of the Boston Catholic Union was held last night at Catholic Union hall, with an interesting lecture on the life and voyages of Columbus by Charles H. Farrell, a member of the Union. Farrell has made an extensive study of the career of the great discoverer. The lecture was illustrated with stereoptican views, from photographs and prints collected by Mr. Farrell during a stay of several years in Spain.

Cardinal O'Connell Addresses Archdiocese on New Honor That Has Come to Boston.

much more is the immense import of this event, which in the future much more than now will assume its truly vast significance.

But while we have all these weighty reasons for rejoicing, let us turn our thoughts forward then, and implore Almighty God, the Giver of all good gifts, to illumine our minds and strengthen our hearts by His Divine aid, thus to serve him as to be not utterly unworthy of His benefits. And let us turn the love of our hearts toward our Holy Father, Pius the Tenth, who, while bestowing this joy upon many cities and States, himself sits solitary amid grief and difficulties, deprived of his own rightful inheritance and left utterly dependent upon the charity of the Christian world.

Let Boston, now more than ever, since never before had she such reason, rouse herself to a full sense of her sublime Catholic duty. Let all the world knows that this diocese, so vigorous and so faithful, has taken her place among the highest and noblest Sees of the world with grateful pride and that this youngest principally knows its own regal glory in the performance of high duty to God, to Mother Church, and to Peter's Successor. I commend myself humbly to the prayers of my beloved flock—priests and people—that my voyage to Rome may be a peaceful one, and that I may return from this historic visit to the Tomb of the Apostles and from the high and holy converse with him, who for me is next to God, Himself, on earth, strengthened and consoled, ready again for more and better work for the Church and for our own beloved country.

W. H. O'CONNELL,
Archbishop of Boston.

Given at Boston, on the Feast of All Saints, November 1, 1911.

Cardinal's Suite Chosen.

Cardinal O'Connell will have as the members of his suite on his journey to Rome, for which city he sails next Saturday, the following members of the clergy of the archdiocese of Boston:

The Rev. Dr. P. J. Supple of St. John's Church, Roxbury.

The Right Rev. Monsignor E. J. Moriarty of St. Peter's Church, Cambridge.

The Right Rev. Monsignor J. S. Millerick of St. Joseph's Church, West End.

The Right Rev. Monsignor M. J. Splaine, of the Cathedral.

The party of distinguished churchmen will sail for Naples on Saturday at 2:30 p. m. from the Hoosac docks in Charlestown on the White Star liner Canopic. If schedule time is maintained by the ship, the Boston travellers are due to arrive in Rome on November 23. The ceremonies of the Cardinalate will be opened four days later.

RODGERS WITHIN 75 MILES OF PASADENA

PASADENA, Cal., Nov. 4.—Calbraith P. Rodgers, who started on a flight across the American continent from New York, forty-nine days ago, for the Hearst $50,000 prize, to-day reached a point within seventy-five miles of this city, his goal on the Pacific ocean. On account of trouble with his motor he was obliged to abandon his purpose of finishing the flight this afternoon.

Thousands of patient spectators and a committee composed of well known men of this region waited visibly the whole afternoon at Tournament Park to give the transcontinental flyer a fitting welcome, while he tinkered feverishly with his failing motor at Banning, where he finished a flight of 105 miles this morning.

Off for Pasadena To-day.

It is now his purpose to fly to Pasadena to-morrow afternoon with all parts of his motor and his biplane in perfect condition. On the last lap of the most remarkable air journey undertaken the aviator is determined to take no rest. He wishes to make certain there will be no disaster between Banning and Pasadena.

Rodgers left Imperial Junction for what he hoped would be the last stage of his flight at 10:45 o'clock this morning. He had planned to leave Imperial Junction at daybreak but the absence of a suitable starting place caused a delay. While he was shaving and making an unusually elaborate toilet in preparation for his triumphant entry into Pasadena members of his party went out to seek a proper starting place.

Seeks Starting Place.

After a hasty breakfast at a railroad lunch counter, Rodgers went to inspect the place to which the biplane had been taken. He was not satisfied and went out to hunt for a place that would meet with his approval.

An hour later he returned and reported that he had selected a stretch of virgin plain on the shore of the Salton sea. The automobile was hitched to the aeroplane and towed the dying machine to the new spot four miles away.

After the bulky engine had been subjected to another careful examination the flyer essayed a start from the sandy banks of the great inland salt lake which perpetually inundates this section of the Imperial Valley.

Makes Easy Rise.

He rose easily from the soft bed of sand, but the engine sputtered and refused to such an extent that it was palpable to the spectators the power was sadly depleted. After the aviator had circled about to gain the machine higher into the air for powerful gliding flight, he was reluctantly obliged to bring it back on the sand. His mechanicians again carefully looked over the engine and pronounced it ready after twenty minutes.

The motor, which had performed the extraordinary feat of driving the aeroplane 4,000 miles across the continent, wanted a rest. By patient work the aviator and his own finally coaxed the motor to behave itself and it appeared ready as it swung the great propellers around when the aviator started toward Pasadena.

Spiraling high above the flat, sandy, soaring birds that are seen in this country, the airman rose to a height of 1,000 feet. Off in the distance dimly pencilled like a rarefied ribbon, he could see the faint outlines of the pass in the mountains that marked the highest point of his journey between Imperial Junction and Pasadena.

Heads for Pasadena.

Stopping only to flutter a handkerchief to signify he was settled back in his seat and headed straight as a dart for Pasadena.

The air was clear as crystal, magnifying all objects immensely, but within five minutes after the machine left the ground it assumed the small proportions of a desert bird, a few minutes it faded out of sight.

The special train which has followed the aviator across the continent, pursued him closely to-day with the purpose of keeping as close as possible during the last hour of the flight.

Made a Perfect Landing.

The aeroplane reached Banning, 106 miles from Imperial Junction, about 2 o'clock. Rodgers made a perfect landing coming down for fuel, oil and water as previously arranged. But in overhauling the motor it was discovered that it needed more repairs. It was found impossible to accomplish these in time to continue to Los Angeles at 5 o'clock. It was announced the aviator would resume his flight to-morrow.

Rodgers started his trans-continental flight as a contestant for the $50,000 prize offered by William Randolph Hearst, on October 10, 1910, within the time limit of October 10.

Dr. Vicente Santoni, Graduate Of the Medical Faculty of Paris, Recommends Peruna.

DR. VICENTE SANTONI.

The undersigned, Dr. Vicente Santoni, of the Medical faculty of Paris, practicing in Ponce, Porto Rico, certifies:

That he has been using the preparation known as Peruna for some time, for catarrhal diseases, always obtaining excellent results. That it is a good preparation and he will always use it in cases for which it is adapted.

Dr. Vicente Santoni,
Ponce, Porto Rico.

Peruna His Prescription.

Testimonial of Dr. Esteban Vidal y Rico, office Ponce, Porto Rico, Doctor of Medicine and Surgery of the University of Madrid, Honorary Member of the Faculty of Barcelona, Catalana, Spain. Has practiced in the hospitals of Paris and has been admitted to the bar of Porto Rico.

"I certify that I prescribe Peruna, a remedy for pulmonary diseases manufactured by The Peruna Co. of Columbus, Ohio, U. S. A., and that I have been surprised by the quick, sure results and its good pharmacological formula."

E. Vidal y Rico,
Ponce, Porto Rico.

Cough and Lung Trouble.

Mr. Armando J. Peres, Galiano 75, Habana, Cuba, writes: "I write to tell you of the marvelous results that I have obtained from your remedy, Peruna.

"I have suffered four months from an obstinate cough and a great deal of expectoration, due to congestion of the right lung. I took a great many different remedies and many medicines, and when I had lost all hope of being cured, the eminent and illustrious Dr. Bustillo Lund advised and recommended Peruna, in doses of one tablespoonful before every meal. At the end of the first bottle the expectoration had completely disappeared, and I took four more bottles to cure myself completely.

"A little while afterward I was seized with a very bad catarrh, and began again to take the Peruna, with the result that catarrh disappeared on the third day."

The Sick Man's Friend.

Mr. Sylvester E. Smith, Room 218, Granite Block, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "Peruna is the best friend a sick man can have. A few months ago I came here in a wretched condition. Exposure and dampness had ruined my once robust health. I had catarrhal affections of the bronchial tubes and for a time there was doubt as to my recovery.

"My good, honest, old doctor advised me to take Peruna, which I did and in a short time my health began to improve very rapidly; the bronchial trouble gradually disappeared and in three months my health was fully restored. Accept a grateful man's thanks for his restoration to perfect health."

Good Results from Peruna.

Pedro Perea Fajardo, Surgeon and Doulist, writes from Mayagues, Porto Rico, as follows: "I recommend Peruna to my patients because it is good, because it cures and because it has always given the best of results in every disease for which it is recommended."

Pedro Perea Fajardo, M. D.

FIRE CAUSES $30,000 LOSS AT BURLINGTON

e BURLINGTON, Vt., Nov. 4.—Fire destroyed the Hibbard block, a three-story structure owned by the American Woolen company, and a two-story building adjoining owned by Thomas Cushing, late this afternoon, the total loss being $30,000. A general alarm was given calling all the fire apparatus of the city to the scene.

The fact that there was no wind saved the spread of the flames to other structures in the vicinity.

The fire was discovered at 4:30 o'clock by Moses Fine, a fourteen-year-old newsboy, who was selling papers. He says he saw pouring out of a window on the third floor of the Hibbard block. He rang in an alarm. When the firemen arrived the building was a mass of flames.

The fire spread to the two-story lodging house and fruit store adjoining and both was soon destroyed.

The building is used as a woolen department by the American Woolen Company, and 150 girls are employed. The fact that it was a half holiday and no one was in the building undoubtedly saved many lives.

CHARITY FAIR ENDS WITH DAZZLING BALL

Society Women Conclude Two Days' Event With Costume Dancing.

Pretty girls of every nation danced for charity yesterday afternoon in the parlor of the Vendome, when the Woolson Charity Club held its annual fair for the benefit of its hospital. The fair opened Friday afternoon with tea, at which Mrs. Eugene N. Foss, Mrs. Esther Frances Boland, president of the club, and Mrs. Frank D. Ellison were the hostesses. The second afternoon turned the stately rooms into a whirling vaudeville scene, and the fair ended with a charming ball at which there were about 200 present.

There were so many tables, and so many ladies selling the pretty wares as they could make change, that the officers have not been able to count up the proceeds. But they say that Friday was a very profitable day, and that yesterday was even better. There were the usual apron, candy, and fancy work tables, with aprons and dolls and pincushions to delight the children. The refreshment corner was especially popular, and the attention of the pretty volunteer waitresses were in great demand.

Mrs. Charles L. Grammer was chairman of the fair committee, aided by Mrs. F. S. Risteen as vice-chairman, Mrs. George F. Hurd, secretary, and Mrs. A. L. Tallman treasurer. The other members of the committee were: Mrs. Esther Frances Boland, Mrs. J. Sewall Reed, Mrs. A. L. Tallman, Mrs. George W. Wheeler, Mrs. J. W. Johnson, Mrs. William H. Converse, Mrs. W. F. Thacher, Mrs. F. E. Ross, Mrs. M. E. Wilson, Mrs. E. S. Fletcher, Mrs. C. P. Blanchard, Mrs. James A. Towle, Mrs. F. A. Merrill, Mrs. W. L. Jones, Mrs. H. B. Southwick, Mrs. Edwin F. Kemp, Mrs. G. F. Perkins, Mrs. M. E. Dinsmore, Mrs. B. D. Cushing, Mrs. J. I. Wingate, Mrs. William Foster, and Mrs. E. C. Poggi.

Mrs. Arthur H. James and Miss Mary Olivia Stimpson presided over the refreshment committee, and Mrs. James A. Towle and Mrs. M. E. Wilson as committee on tables. The other committees were: Entertainment—Mrs. George T. Perkins; program—Miss Esther Frances Boland; printing—Mrs. J. C. Otis. The door attendants were Mrs. M. E. Dinsmore and Mrs. R. D. Cushing.

FIND PERFECT YOUTH 92 MILES FROM HUB

Howard Bennett, 21 Years Old Never Touched Weed or Drink.

By GERTRUDE L. MARVIN

NINETY-TWO miles west of Boston, in the village of Ludlow Centre, the perfect young man has been found.

He has never had a smoke.
He has never taken a drink.
He doesn't know one card from another.
He has never used profanity.
He doesn't like the city.
He isn't crazy about the girls.
His name is Howard Bennett.

Howard was 21 years old the other day and, to live up to the saying reported the committee designated by Charles Rood, Springfield millionaire, came to—asked the dairy farm of the Bennetts and presented Howard with a handsome gold watch. "Pa" Bennett was so mightly pleased with this recognition of his excellent son that he unbuckled to the extent of a gold ring, to match the fine piece. Then they had a feast and a pleasant time was had by one and all.

Yesterday I saw Mr. Howard Bennett for the first time, and I asked him—because a baleful editor told me to—I asked the model youth if he had ever been kissed.

It wasn't any of my business, particularly, and I am sure I didn't care, one way or another, but you know how editors are! Do you, or don't you? When they are good, they are very good indeed, when they are bad, they send you around asking Perfect Youths whether they've been kissed.

Is No Mollycoddle.

It pleases me to be able to report that Mr. Howard Bennett is no mollycoddle. He is a splendid specimen of a young man. If he hasn't cut up any didoes in the village lately it is only that out of a boy. He is a fine young fellow, and already a substantial citizen in his behalf.

Speaking about being kissed, however, Mr. Bennett showed with some modesty that if the will of Charles Rood provided gold watches only for those who had, ahem!—no boasting, you understand—why, that is to say, Howard wouldn't be wearing the Rood watch; so there.

It appears, moreover, that young Mr. Bennett is not the first, but the fifth young man of Ludlow Center who has won the Rood watch for good conduct. I didn't see the four previous winners, I imagine some body must have stolen them.

Three years ago, Mr. Rood, a Springfield millionaire whose magnificent Summer home is half a mile down the road from

HOWARD BENNETT, THE BAY STATE'S "PERFECT YOUTH"

HOWARD BENNETT.
Lives on a sixty-one acre farm, ninety-one miles west of Boston, and has no discoverable faults.

Bennett's place, established a fund providing a gold watch for any Ludlow boy who should deserve it. And in three years, Howard Bennett is the fifth boy to qualify, which makes it look as though Ludlow had a corner on the Kingdom of Heaven.

Last Monday night Howard was 21.

"It was supposed to be a surprise party," Howard related with a shy smile. "But anyway, in the evening right after supper about 50 of the neighbors walked in, all in a bunch, and Mr. Curtis, of the Congregational Church over in Ludlow, presented me with the gold watch. And then my father gave me this gold ring, and that was all. Oh, well, then we all had a sort of a party."

"Do I dance?" Why, yes, I'm going to a dance to-morrow night. I don't suppose I'll dance all the evening, but I'll dance some.

"How'm I going to vote? Well, I don't know. I don't bother much with politics. Father is a Republican, though, and I suppose I'll vote with him."

Best of all, Howard Bennett is a country boy who does NOT want to go to the city.

"No city life for me," said Howard with a quiet smile that made one feel insignificant for suggesting that anybody could want to leave this quiet, prosperous valley for the noise and confusion of a city.

"Of course it's interesting in the city to watch what kind of teams they use on the streets. But I don't know—either there's too much going on or not enough, but it's not my kind of work, and it makes me feel lonely.

"I can't see what the city boy finds so attractive about his life. They never have any money left, and lots of them never know where the next meal is coming from. Out here we have everything we need, right on the place. There is no $18 a ton to pay for coal, either. When it gets cold, go out to the wood lot and get a cord."

Somehow the conversation drifted around to girls again. And again found Mr. Bennett, who has clear blue eyes and a fair, guileless face—blushed.

Busy on the Farm.

"No, I don't like the girls, and the girls don't like me," he protested. But he could not back up the statement and it had a hollow sound. So he hastily admitted that he was too much interested in farming to bother with girls, yet. But that work to bother with girls, yet. But that when it did come to picking out the lucky one on earth, he would probably be a country girl.

"Perhaps it is because I have known so few city people," he began, with instinctive courtesy for his city audience, "but I like country people better than city people, and I like country girls better, too. I never have bothered very much with them yet, when you get up between 4 and 5 every morning, the year around, and work outdoors all day, by night you are good and tired and ready to go to bed. City folks, at that same hour, are beginning to think what to do next. I don't care much for city games, they don't just interest me, and I don't read anything except the newspapers once in a while. But I do like my work. I like being with the animals. They get to know you and they are just like friends."

Very modestly he admitted that his father owns 120 acres of fertile valley with strips of woodland reaching up the mountain side.

"We have a milk route," he explained, "and we keep from 12 to 16 cows. Of course my father has worked this farm for 21 years, and it is in fine shape. But the interesting thing about farming is that there are always so many new things to do. I hope we're going to have electricity here soon, and then there will be a lot of new equipments to put in. Another thing I want is to have all registered stock. We have a couple already. Then a colt is worth $50, first off, instead of having to sell it to the butcher for $5. My idea is to have the best and get the best prices for it. It is more work, but there is more satisfaction in it."

CHICAGO CASES TRIED BY $50,000,000 JURY

Many of City's Richest Men Called to Decide on Insanity Patients.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Seldom in the history of this city has so much wealth been presented as was in the County Detention Hospital, where many of Chicago's best citizens had been called by Judge Goggs to sit as jurors in insanity cases.

All traffic in Wood street, which passes the Detention Hospital, was stopped while the "$50,000,000 jury," as it was called, was in session. More costly automobiles are ordinarily seen at one time in front of the river were drawn up in front of the court.

Among those who were ready to answer to roll call in court convened were Edwin Mandel, vice-president of Mandel brothers; Edward J. Ashman, vice-president of the fair; Harry Hunt, general superintendent of Swarzschild & Sulzberger Company; J. P. Marsh, a banker; Dr. H. T. Davis, former superintendent of the detention hospital; Arthur Meeker, general superintendent of Armour & Company; Charles J. Swift, vice-president of Swift & Company; L. Wilk, the secretary of the Pullman Trust Company; Charles M. Macfarlane, secretary of Morris & Co.; Rudolph Keller, cashier of the Colonial Trust & Savings Bank.

The jury disposed of thirty cases in the three and one-half hours it was in session.

VANIMAN AIRSHIP WRECKED ON OCEAN

Craft Intended for Trans-Atlantic Flight Laid Up for Repairs.

ATLANTIC CITY, Nov. 4.—Melvin Vaniman to-day made a spectacular flight in his dirigible balloon Akron, in which he hopes to cross the Atlantic, but came to grief on the return spin to his hangar, when the craft suddenly descended on the muddy waters of Grassy Bay, where it lay marooned until towed back to the starting point. It will take several weeks to repair the craft.

The balloon, at an altitude of 300 feet, shot out over Absecon Inlet at a speed of thirty-five miles an hour. Vaniman sent the balloon swinging in great circles above Absecon at a remarkable speed and performed gyrations that were cheered by the thousands thronging the beach and Boardwalk.

The moment the balloon rode over the water, Jack Irwin, the wireless operator, dropped his ground wire into the breakers and sent off this first message:

"The cold, but things are going great."

Heading homeward, Vaniman flew over to the Pleasantville, where he came down. He ascended again, soon came down again, and then fluttered down in the waters of the bay.

MILLIONS TIED UP, LIVES ON $12 A WEEK

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—From a life of opulence Colonel Lewis A. Bryan, one of the millionaire residents of Gary, Ind., has descended to living on $12 a week, all because his bride of a year has attached all his property, pending trial of her suit for divorce. Colonel Bryan, who is sixty years of age, must think it's young wife is treating him fairly. He showered her with jewels up to the time their marital troubles began. When Mrs. Bryan lost a $10,000 necklace he bought her another.

To Quickly Gain a New Complexion

(American Family Journal)

The quickest way to get rid of a bad complexion is by the use of ordinary mercolized wax, procurable at any drug store. Just spread the wax over your face at night in the same manner you would use cold cream, and the beautifying work begins at once. Next morning when you wash this off, tiny particles of the old, worn-out skin are taken off with it. The following day more of the dead, sallow, blotchy or muddy complexion.

The fresh, bright, healthy-hued skin underneath furnishes your new complexion. No pimples has yet been discovered that will give a woman such a rarely beautiful and youthful skin, clear and velvety, as this wax and disease which mar the skin, of course disappear with the skin itself.

Mrs. Vermilya, Charged With Poisoning, Tries Suicide

Under Arrest in Chicago Because of Ten Strange Deaths

Supposed to Have Taken Dose Such as Killed Her Alleged Victims.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—Eluding the vigilance of the detectives and nurses assigned to guard her, Mrs. Louise Vermilya, charged with the murder of Policeman Arthur Bissonette by means of poison, was taken suddenly and violently ill at her home, No. 415 East Twenty-ninth street this afternoon and is declared to have poisoned herself. She is critically ill.

She asked for hard boiled eggs when luncheon time was due and when the eggs were served to her insisted upon using white pepper to put on them. She is declared to have directed one of her attendants to a certain pepper box in the pantry which she asserted contained a fine grade of pepper.

Taking this box in her hand, she carefully sprinkled part of the contents on one of the eggs and ate the egg so calmly as if it were an every-day occurrence.

Within a few moments she became very ill and an examination of the pepper box disclosed the fact that it contained rat poison, of which a large part was arsenic.

Physicians who were hastily summoned prescribed antidotes. The only information given by the police was that "Mrs. Vermilya is a very sick woman."

Police Are Chagrined.

Chagrined by the apparent ease with which Mrs. Vermilya believed to have outwitted them, the police refused to make any statement for publication concerning the deadly pepper box, but it is known that only extreme efforts saved the life of the woman. If everything which is declared to have taken place during the day to be absolutely correct, Mrs. Vermilya's case is one of the most unusual in the history of crime.

Mrs. Vermilya's delight in the presence of death, as evinced by her apparent pleasure when handling dead bodies is now believed to have been a sort of monomania which may explain the whole series of deaths which have occurred in her immediate vicinity.

Efforts to gain admittance to the Vermilya home to-day, especially after she became ill, proved unavailing. It was known early in the day that she was suffering from a bad cold. Dr. Van Arsdale, who has been attending her declared that she at first appeared to be threatened with pneumonia, but was much better and she was believed to be on the road to recovery.

Three Mysterious Bottles.

Mrs. Vermilya and already retained Joseph M. Borreas, the attorney who defended Dr. Haldane Clemiston, to defend her, and so long as the authorities had knowledge of the presence of arsenic in the body of Bissonette only the chance for a bitter legal fight were bright.

But Mrs. Vermilya has been permitted to read all of the newspapers and consequently learned this morning that Cook county officials had already started to exhume the body of Policeman Bissonette who died in her home after an illness of two days.

Incidentally, it was prominently mentioned that Dr. Van Arsdale, who has been attending Mrs. Vermilya, is largely responsible for the investigation into the death of Arthur Bissonette.

If Mrs. Vermilya is guilty of the crime of which she is suspected and for one of which she has been accused, it is believed that both of the above items of information would have a depressing effect upon her.

Three mysterious bottles were found to be closely in the vicinity occupied by Bissonette. One of them is declared to have contained chloroform, and all three were turned over to Coroner Hoffman's office for examination.

This discovery was immediately seized upon by Mrs. Vermilya's family and other defenders as an indication that Bissonette and committed suicide notwithstanding the fact that his illness extended over a known period of at least three weeks.

It is probable now that the Coroner will order the bodies of at least two of ten former associates of Mrs. Vermilya exhumed in a further search for poison evidence against the woman. Those deaths were sudden, and in four of them at least she was a beneficiary to money either by bequest or from insurance.

Immediately upon the announcement from the chemist that Bissonette had died from poisoning Mrs. Vermilya was arrested on the specific charge of killing Bissonette and Richard T. Smith, an Illinois Central conductor.

She had been nervous up to this time, and when she knew that there was no escape for her she asked to make her will. After that a doctor was called and he announced that she was suffering from pneumonia.

With the arrest of Mrs. Vermilya, who has been under suspicion for several days, the police expect to reveal a series of poisonings which will involve the guilty person as the arch-poisoner of modern times.

In almost every instance, it is alleged, that Mrs. Vermilya profited by the deaths in the way of insurance or inheritance.

The arrest of Mrs. Vermilya was decided upon by Chief of Police McWeeny when it was learned that three experts had discovered that Bissonette had died from arsenic poisoning.

Arsenic in Body.

Professor Walter S. Haines, Dr. Ralph W. Webster and Dr. E. R. Lecount, who were engaged to examine the viscera of Bissonette, reported that they had found more than sufficient quantity of arsenic to cause death.

Following the arrest of Mrs. Vermilya, Coroner Hoffman immediately began preparations for the exhumation of the body of Smith and one other, the identity of which he refused to make known.

The eight other deaths in the sensational case were:

Charles Vermilya, second husband, died two years ago, leaving $2,000.

Frank Brinkamp, son by first marriage, died a year ago, leaving method $1,200.

Richard T. Smith, died a year ago while touring at her home, reputed to have left her $2,000 life insurance, and declared by some to have been a third husband.

Mrs. Fred Vermilya, wife of Mrs. Vermilya's son, who died five years ago.

MRS. VERMILYA, STYLED A MODERN BORGIA

Chicago woman whose alleged poison plot is regarded by police as rival to notorious Belle Gunness murders.

woman. The police are prosecuting me. I have never committed a crime, nor have I aided in one.

Any woman who marries more than twice is liable to such suspicions as the police express in my case, in the event that the men she marries die suddenly or mysteriously.

Says She Is innocent.

"I do not fear any investigation that may be made. I believe any life will stand investigation as well as the lives of most women who have been married several times. A woman gets enough relatives in-law when she marries once. She is piling up trouble for herself when she marries again.

"I have told no lies to anybody, yet contradictory stories are appearing in the newspapers that make me seem a liar. I am a religious woman and I belong to the Methodist Church. I always went to church when I lived in Crystal Lake. I have not been to church much here, because it did not seem the same. I was waiting to get back home.

"Since a part of her morbid history was revealed E. M. Blocks, an undertaker at Barrington, Ill., who buried her first husband and two of her children, she has been subjected almost continuously to the investigation of the third degree. It was said that her remarkable nerve aroused the sleuths.

"She seemed to revel in death," declared Blocks.

"When she lived in Barrington with Fred Brinkamp, her first husband, she attracted considerable among the neighbors by the strange interest she evinced in deaths. Dead people had a perverse fascination for her. I have known her to go to bereaved families that were virtually strangers to her and beg permission to help care for the dead.

"After the death of her husband, in 1900, she acquired a habit of visiting my undertaking shop and sitting around for hours. She seemed to love to be in the presence of the dead.

Tells of Daughter's Death.

"Three months after the death of her husband her little daughter died. Less than a year later another daughter died in her home. After I buried the second child she came to my place more frequently than before. She often watched me at work and, I am quite certain, knew the embalming fluid I used contained a preparation of arsenic. If a person were given arsenic and afterward embalmed it wouldn't be easy to tell whether the poison had been administered before death or after."

The discovery of the intended marriage of Arthur Bissonette, the policeman who died mysteriously after he had been taken ill in Mrs. Vermilya's home, has brought fresh complications into the case.

Bissonette was to have been married during the holidays to Miss Lydia Rivard, daughter of F. A. Rivard, of Marshall, Minn. She was preparing to come to Chicago within a few weeks and had her trousseau ready. When his fiancé learned of Bissonette's death she came to town and attended the funeral. She said nothing of her engagement to Bissonette.

Bissonette left a considerable part of his money, amounting to $1,350, to Miss Rivard.

Mrs. Vermilya was not mentioned in his will.

Mrs. A. E. La Rocque, of No. 3184 Vernon avenue, a sister of Miss Rivard's stepmother, went to Bissonette's room a few hours after he had died.

"If he was poisoned," she said, "it was done because of jealousy. There were dozens of love letters from Lydia in his trunk. We saw that the trunk was open. The letters were in plain view and had evidently been read a short time before. I do not know by whom. The young man was split up in my home months ago and I am sure he loved her and intended to marry her."

Similar circumstances that surrounded the deaths of Bissonette and Richard Smith, another roomer at the Vermilya home, first led to police investigation. Smith died about seven months before Bissonette.

Charles C. Boysen, an undertaker, of No. 3903 Cottage Grove avenue, was drawn into the case by friends of Smith, who told of threats he had made against the latter's life two weeks before he had died.

EDITH DEACON BACK, STILL IN MOURNING

Boston Belle Returns from Trip Abroad Following Death of Her Fiance.

The handsome Miss Edith Deacon, who has been called the prettiest girl in Boston, has returned to America from her European trip, still in mourning for her fiance, George Lee Peabody, the Boston banker, who died in a Baltimore hospital last Spring after a long illness.

It was Miss Deacon's devotion to Mr. Peabody during his illness which aroused the sympathy of all her friends and earned for her the name of being the prettiest girl on record. She will not come to Boston at once, it is understood, but will remain with her grandmother, Mrs. Baldwin, in New York for the Winter.

Miss Dorothea Deacon is now the Princess Radziwill of Poland, now in Rome, decided recognition by her husband's family, and Miss Girdys, with whom the Crown Prince of Germany was at one time infatuated, is now living in Paris.

The Deacon girls, whose beauty is world-famous, are the daughters of the late Edward Parker Deacon of Boston, and Florence Baldwin, daughter of the late Rear Admiral Charles S. Baldwin, U. S. N.

Edith Deacon has been the belle of Newport for several Summers up to the last, She is tall and slender, with deep brown eyes and a face full of expression and winsomeness.

She was some time ago honored by being made the official "mascot" of the North Atlantic squadron after a series of minor mishaps in the fleet which occurred while at Newport under Rear Admiral Evans. Ever since the days when she was a debutante she acquired a habit of visiting ports and denying rumors of her engagements to various suitors and many were the gasps of surprise when her engagement to Mr. Peabody was finally confirmed.

To Quickly Chase Away Wrinkles

(From Fashion Review)

The surest and quickest way to obliterate wrinkles of every description, from the finest lines to the deepest furrows is by means of the saxolite formula, about which we've heard so much of late. Bathing the face and neck in the lotion at once lightens and tones up the skin, affecting every wrinkle, as well as creased or saggy tissue about the cheeks, neck or chin. Any druggist can supply pure saxolite, which is inexpensive and effective. Dissolve an ounce of this in a half pint of witch hazel, and you have as perfect a solution as any expert can make.

MEDFORD TO REBUILD BURNED OPERA HOUSE

Reconstruction on Finer Basis Is to Be Begun To-morrow Morning.

Medford's burned Opera House block is to be rebuilt better and finer than ever, declares Edward J. Doherty of Brighton, who controls the property which was partially destroyed yesterday.

"We are going to start right in Monday morning to rebuild," said Mr. Doherty. "The Opera House will be finer than before and the lodge rooms and offices more elaborate."

The fire started at 7 o'clock in the morning in the upper part of the block, in Medford square. It burned rapidly, but valiant work by the firemen saved the lower floors. The damage by fire and water is estimated at $40,000, partially insured.

Charles H. Barnes, treasurer of the Medford Trust Company, risked his life to save the books and cash of the company. Captain Frank Hathaway of Ladder 1 received a bad gash in the head from falling glass.

Among the heavy losers are the Medford Knights of Columbus, Harmony Lodge of Odd Fellows and Medford Lodge of Elks.

LOVE NOTES IN TRUNK.

Hubby Wired for Baggage, and Wife Opened the Trunk.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Justice Blackmar granted a divorce to Mrs. Thomas Foster to-day. The plaintiff named Miss Alice C. Lampman, of Oil City, Pa. Testimony showed that Mr. and Mrs. Foster were married in 1902 but separated five years ago. Last August Miss Lena Hanson, a cousin of Mrs. Foster, made an effort at reconciliation, and Foster came to live with his wife. He was now called to Chicago on business. He wired home for his his trunk and Mrs. Foster, with the idea of sending a present as a surprise, opened the trunk and found 100 love letters from Miss Lampman.

Why I Lost My Job

Reasons Why Thousands Like Me Cannot Satisfy Their Employers.

I believe my fate is not unlike that of thousands of other workers who daily lose their places for reasons they do not know and probably would not believe. When their last pay envelope comes along, it is usually, "Your services no longer required." If the truth were known, the reason for their uncertain and precarious world probably be that their usefulness was destroyed because of some mental worry, bodily ailment or general indisposition. These things, as we all know, are the most fruitful causes of failure in all walks of life. The battle of Waterloo was lost because of a headache. In this strife age our minds must be clear, rapid, active and free from outside influence or worry, or else we go down to failure with the throng of "boarders" who go from one place of employment to another, giving no satisfaction to others or to themselves, constantly growing older and less useful, with no ambition, no will power, and no hope.

Every man requires from every other man the best that is in him. But no man can use or get the best that is in him who is not free and clear from all fretful indigestions and worries.

That was my trouble. I was full of troubles. That's why I lost my job. My stomach got in the first place was always out of order, and I was worrying about it and my mind grew cloudy, and slow. I made mistakes, and grew grouchy. That was the end.

There are thousands like me, going about with "quick lunch" facts, dyspeptic symptoms and repulsive atmospheres. No employer wants such men's services.

Take my advice. A healthy stomach is half the battle, for it keeps your mind clear, and your face rosy. I have a healthy stomach now and hold a good position, and my employer is satisfied and so am I.

I started to take Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets which I was told were good for the worst cases of indigestion and dyspepsia. The first few tablets made a wonderful difference in my condition.

One ingredient of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets digests 3,000 grains of food. The stomach doesn't have to work at all. The Tablets do all the work, no matter how heavy your meal.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets cure brash, eructations, burning sensations, bloat, irritations, loss of appetite, nausea, heartburn, lack of energy, loss of memory and dyspepsia and indigestion in their very worst forms.

No other little tablets in the world can do so much. You should carry them around with you wherever you go and take them regularly after meals. Then you will realize what it is to be freed from stomach torment, and have a clear mind, a quick memory, a happy disposition, comfort and rest. Get Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at any drug store for 50c a box.

Send us your name and address today and we will at once send you by mail a sample package, free. Address F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

RUM WARRANTS FOR SOUTH SHORE HOTELS

Mysterious Law Enforcement League Gets Evidence Against Five Places.

The mysterious Law Enforcement League, whose membership is unknown and which is represented only by its attorney, bobbed up again yesterday and struck at South Shore hotels which have no license to sell liquor. Attorney Felix W. Medlertrick, who won't tell the names of his clients, secured warrants from the Plymouth County District Court, Judge Davis, against five hotels in Plymouth and Duxbury on charges of keeping and selling liquor.

The Ray Detective Agency of Boston secured the evidence upon which warrants were issued, acting for the Law Enforcement League.

The counts against which charges have been brought are among the best known on the South Shore. The aristocratic hotel Somerset, of which William Dowden is proprietor, and the famous Plymouth Rock House, run by Clark and Sampson, were the Plymouth hotels affected.

The celebrated Brant Rock House in Duxbury run by E. A. Sumner, the Webster House, run by Lovell & Co., and the Franklin House, run by Wilbur Collins, are charged with selling liquor in Duxbury.

"The evidence was secured," said James Ray, head of the Ray Detective Agency, "by members of our staff who visited these hotels in an automobile and were able to purchase all they wanted to drink and all they wanted to take away. The evidence was acquired within the past two weeks.

"To-day I accompanied Felix McGettrick, the attorney for the Law Enforcement League, to Plymouth, with two witnesses, members of my staff, and we secured the warrants from Judge Davis.

NEW PAPER IN SOMERVILLE.

Thomas P. Nolan Is the Head of the Enterprise.

Thomas P. Nolan, prominent as a member of Typographical Union No. 13, writes the Democratic candidate for Mayor of Somerville, and with a host of Boston friends, made his bow yesterday as an editor. Mr. Nolan launched the Somerville Enterprise, a weekly newspaper, that starts out auspiciously. The new paper is to be independent and its motto is "Equal opportunity and no favors."

"The Enterprise," writes the new editor and publisher, "will be conducted in its attitude toward public men and upon public measures in the best controlled by any political clique or faction and it stands squarely and strongly on a platform in which 'PROGRESS' will be the principal plank."

Shake, Editor Nolan.

MOVING PICTURE EVICTION.

Unpopular Film Director Is "Shotup" Out of Town.

OXNARD, Cal., Nov. 4.—Pursued by a band of moving picture cowboys, mounted on horseback and in automobiles, and with the tires of his automobile, Director Charles Goodman of a film company, taking pictures between this city and Santa Paula, was forced to flee from the picture camp to this city. The trouble started when members of the company objected to reward stunts the director had asked them to do. Fearful of his safety, his company participating cowboys employed to give verisimilitude to Western scenes and the old "shooting getaway method" decided up to rid the camp of Goodman.

DEER IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Manchester Man Says Hunting Is Better Than in Maine.

MANCHESTER, N. H., Oct. 28.—That New Hampshire offers better deer hunting than far-famed Maine is the claim of J. B. Flanders of No. 351 East High street, who has returned from a hunt in Colebrook, Coos County, in company with W. W. Flanders of Lowell. The first two days deer, and reporting two others rounded and lost in the woods. Manchester hunters have spent two weeks in Maine this year and shot less. Mr. Flanders states that deer are more plentiful in the North woods of the State than he has ever found them before.

REBELS CAPTURE SHANGHAI'S FORTS

American Marines Save th Foreigners From Harm During Battles.

PEKIN, Nov. 4.—The revolutionaries to-night are in possession not only of the city of Shanghai, but also of the forts commanding the entrance to the Yang-Tze river at its mouth and of the Shanghai arsenal. The Kiang Yin and Woo Sung forts at the river's entrance surrendered and the capture of the big arsenal was completed several hours later. The loyal troops holding the arsenal maintained a spirited defense and there was sharp fighting which resulted in the wounding of twenty of the imperial troops.

The American naval commander landed 200 marines during the morning and sent them to the American settlement for the protection of all foreigners who have sought asylum there. A party of American marines also guards the landing stations of the American, Pacific and the Great Northern cables.

Hankow Swept by Flames.

Almost the whole of the native city of Hankow was burned by the rebels and there are varying reports as to the fate of the Wesleyan mission, near the Han River, in which were 80 blind boys and 150 wounded persons, who, with the staff of the mission, made up a total of 300 persons. Dr. Booth, at the head of the mission, asked the imperialists to grant an armistice of two hours to permit of removal from the premises, but the firing ceased for only a short time, and it is not by any means certain that many escaped perishing in the flames.

A Red Cross steamer which attempted to rescue the inmates of the mission was driven back by the fire from the rebel fort. One shell riddled the steamer's smokestack.

When the vessel was compelled to turn back the mission was still standing, but its position was hopeless, the flames being within 300 yards of the building.

The fires in the town were started by the imperialists, who threw inflammable shells into the place. A strong wind carried the flames across the river to Hanyang, and a strip of that city on the waterfront a mile or more long was destroyed.

Shells Among Foreigners.

When the steamer left an artillery duel was taking place between the batteries of the imperialists which were planted back of the British concession, and the Wu-Chang and Hanchang forts. Several rebel shells landed in the foreign concessions, piercing the walls of houses.

The imperialists occupy the district westward of the railway station almost to the Han river.

The imperial army opposing the rebels at Lan Chow, is spreading to revolt. The American charge d'affaire cabled to Washington to-day that the government's edict had turned over the country to a small, irresponsible group of army officers and that the situation was critical.

BLIND MAN PRAYS TAFT.

Connecticut Petitioner Asks Loan of $3,000.

HOT SPRINGS, Va., Nov. 4.—One of the most unique requests ever made to President Taft was received to-day in a letter from a Connecticut man, who asked Mr. Taft to indorse a note for $3,000 for him. The writer of the letter said he had been blind for ten years, and that if he could raise $3,000 he would be able to make a fresh start in life. Mr. Taft did not respond to the letter, nor did he give out the writer's name or address. The President leaves for Cincinnati to-morrow night, for the first time officially intended. He will register in Cincinnati Monday and vote Tuesday.

$1,800 NOT TOO MUCH.

You May Carry That Amount on Train, Rules Court.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Eighteen hundred dollars is not an unreasonable amount of money to carry on a railroad trip. The Appellate Division of the Supreme Court so decided when it affirmed a verdict of a jury awarding Joseph Knierich that amount plus $428 costs in an action against the New York Central railroad. A train on which Knierich and his wife were riding was wrecked at Pawling, N. Y., and Knierich's $1,800 was lost. The company refused to refund Knierich's cash, holding the amount was too much for a passenger to be carrying on a short ride.

WAR IN TURKEY HITS OUR BOARDING HOUSES

Yes, Sir, for a Fact! It Has Sent Up the Boston Price of Prunes.

Several of us are getting worth more every day. The price of prunes has gone up. This, of course, does not apply to you, Dear Reader, or to the writer, but to a whole lot of other pro—we mean people—about whom one could say a good deal if one wanted to talk.

However, prunes are up and the Italian-Turkish war is the cause. War is all that has been said, and then some.

Colonel Louis W. Dopkins is statistical expert of Boston Chamber of Commerce. Colonel Depass knows all about the rise and fall—when there is any fall, for there hasn't been much noticeable so far—in the cost of wheat, hay, eggs, prunes and other staples.

It seems that a large part of our prunes (edible variety) come from Asiatic Turkey. They are shiped, according to Colonel DePass, from ports which the busy Italian fleet is blockading. No exports, no prunes. Hence a shortage of Asiatic Turkey prunes in the U. S. A.

The disastrous part is that these A. T. prunes are the cheapest, or boarding house brand. The boarding house keepers, forced to buy the French and California, or more expensive prunes, have forced the price of those breeds up. So the increase in cost is general all around.

The boarding house keepers unite in demand that the war be stopped.

"Rats" Perish at Brockton.

BROCKTON, Nov. 4.—The rat mortality has been greatly increased here. Fire in the store of the Amsterdam Hair Goods Company in the Richmond block on Main street caused $500 damage and the loss of several "rats" and other hair manufactures.

YOUTHS RIOT AFTER FOOTBALL CONTEST

Police Rescue Wellesley Lads From Mob of Dorchester Boys.

A riot followed the football game between Dorchester High and the Rock Ridge school of Wellesley at the Dorchet avenue grounds yesterday afternoon, and the police were called to rescue the Wellesley boys from a howling mob of infuriated youths. Kenyon Chamberlain, a member of the Rock Ridge team, was struck on the head with a brick and knocked unconscious.

The trouble began while the game was in progress, but after it had ended in favor of the Dorchester school, the visiting players were pushed and mauled about the field. When finally they made their escape the crowd followed them to Columbus square, where rioting was renewed.

Word was sent to Station 11 on Adams street, and Patrolmen Reardon, O'Rourke and Patton went at the crowd with drawn clubs, driving it before them and permitting the football players to reach the Dorchester High school, where they took refuge in the gymnasium, remaining there until they thought the mob had dispersed.

Attack is Renewed.

Street clothes had been donned in the meantime, and the boys started for the cars. It was necessary for them to walk for a car, and while they stood on the street corner a signal was given and from all directions many of those who were in the original mob reappeared.

The fight began all over again and it was then that Chamberlain was knocked unconscious. His teammates surrounded him as he lay on the ground and managed to keep the crowd at bay until the police, there being fifty-seven in this diversion court squad, arrived, or over sixty per cent. of the entire court business of the district, civil and criminal combined.

SLIPPERS ARE PASSE.

More Shoes Are Worn Now in the United States.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4.—More than 247,000,000 pairs of boots and shoes—three pairs apiece for all who are old enough to wear them—will be turned out of factories this year, according to Census Bureau figures. The figures are for 1909. They show an increase of 3 per cent. over 1904.

	No. of Pairs.
Men's shoes	78,000,000
Boys' and youths' shoes	23,500,000
Women's shoes	99,500,000
Misses' and children's shoes	44,500,000

In addition 13,508,000 pairs of slippers were made. This is a decrease from 1904. It is women and children, not men, who are giving up slippers.

There were 1,818 footwear factories, with $222,324,000 capital. They had 214,000 employes, used $339,000,000 in raw materials and turned out $513,000,000 in finished products.

KNEE BREECHES COME NEXT

Sartorial Expert Prophesies Silk Hose and Ruffles.

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 4.—Knee breeches, silk hose and ruffled lace shirts are things that men are coming to in their wearing apparel within the next ten years, according to Louis Bourgon, sartorial expert of Paris, who arrived here on a holiday jaunt around the world.

"Men to-day are wearing very narrow trousers," he said. "They are getting narrower with the time, and it will be but a few years before they will wear the same styles that were in vogue in the days of the last Louis of France, or during colonial times in the United States. How much more handsome is the man who can display a good figure in knee breeches than he who wears the present baggy looking garments, which do not show at all the form God has made him."

DR. PETERSON STANDS PAT ON RENO DECREE

Declares That Suit of Former Wife in Worcester Is News to Him.

RENO, Nev. Nov. 4.—Dr. Ellis Peterson, who was divorced here recently, declared to-night that he knew nothing of any divorce action his former wife is reported to have instituted at Worcester, Mass. Mrs. Peterson alleges in her libel that the doctor is illegally wedded to his present wife.

"I voted here at the last election," Dr. Peterson said, "and such action has been duly recognized by the State of Nevada as constituting me a bona fide resident of the State and entitled to all privileges as such. This State will naturally defend its every action and I have nothing to worry about." He and his present wife are prominent socially. The doctor was granted a divorce on September 13 and three days later he married Mrs. Mary Wadsworth Fuller of Worcester. The ceremony was performed by the pastor of the local Episcopal Church. This is the second instance of Massachusetts attempting to repudiate a Nevada divorce decree.

The number of suits filed during October more than doubled those of the corresponding month of the previous year, there being fifty-seven in this divorce court squad, this month, or over sixty per cent. of the entire court business of the district, civil and criminal combined.

DR. BODE PRAISES AMERICAN WOMEN

More Attractive Than Women of Paris, Says Curator of Berlin Museum.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—"American women dress better and are more attractive than the women of Paris."

This was the statement made to-day by Dr. Wilhelm Bode, curator of the Kaiser Frederich Museum in Berlin, and a personal friend of Kaiser Wilhelm, who is visiting the United States for the first time in eighteen years and making comparisons.

"Your women," he continued, "in the struggle for style and richness of apparel have natural grace and refinement. The women of Paris go to extremes in dress and instead of achieving beauty the result is hideous. Here you keep more to moderation, the 'golden mean' that must be a component part of all true beauty.

"American women have tall, beautiful figures and lovely coloring. They do well not to spoil their advantages by absurd and ridiculous coloring."

KILLED IN SHANTY AT GAME OF CARDS

Spectator Accidentally Shot as Player Whips Out Gun on October Mountain.

PITTSFIELD, Nov. 4.—[illegible] Hayes, foreman of a [illegible] gang [illegible] Wanton & Company, was shot and instantly killed by Louis Kle[illegible] [illegible] in a shanty on October Mountain at 7 o'clock to-night. Both men are colored. Kle fled to the woods and is being pursued by a posse formed by Deputy Sheriff F. M. White. The slayer fled in the direction of the W. C. Whitney moose and buffalo preserve on the top of October Mountain. The country here is the wildest of the Berkshire mountains.

The shooting of Hayes, it is said, was accidental. He was in a card game with a number of his fellow workmen when a dispute arose and Kle whipped out a revolver. In a struggle the revolver went off and Hayes, who was not in the card game, was killed.

The men were at work on the $500,000 new reservoir being constructed for the Pittsfield Water Company. There are about 500 Italian and colored men at work. The fight to-night was among colored laborers. Little hope is expressed of capturing Kle for several days. The only habitations in that part of the mountain are the laborers' camps and gamekeepers' houses.

Vaccine Rule Bars Little Girl — Mother at Odds with School

HARRIETT DAVIS, BARRED FROM SCHOOL

HARRIETT ELIZABETH DAVIS.

Five-year-old Dorchester miss who was sent home because of her mother's opposition to vaccination.

Mrs. Wilbur Davis Bases Stand on Vaccine Deaths Among Friends.

The public school education of five-year-old Harriett Elizabeth Davis of Dorchester has come to a sudden stop because the law says chubby Harriett must be vaccinated in order to stay in school, and her mother says Harriett shall not be vaccinated.

Mrs. Davis fears blood poisoning. She says she has friends whose children have died from poisonous vaccine. She says Harriett is not to be vaccinated, but insists that the city ought to educate the little girl just the same.

Harriett is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wilbur Davis of No. 39 Selden street. Having attained the school age, she was taken by her mamma at the opening of term this Fall to the kindergarten branch on Thetford street of the Roger Wolcott school district.

Teacher Sends Child Home.

Miss Perry, the kindergarten teacher, discovered in due time that Harriett's plump body has never known the scratch of the vaccine point and its subsequent painful irritation.

Miss Perry, therefore, sent home by Harriett a note informing the mother that Harriett would have to be vaccinated if she was to attend the public school. This note was sent under authority of [illegible] J. George, headmaster of Roger Wolcott district, according to the usual school regulations.

Mrs. Davis is keeping Harriett out of school, saying:

"I will not have Harriett vaccinated. I object to vaccination of children, very much. I know it is the State law, however, and do not blame Miss Perry or the headmaster in the least.

"But I certainly do object to compulsory vaccination. Parents should have the right to their own ideas in regard to the health of their children. Harriett is now in perfect health. I do not intend to have her blood poisoned by vaccine.

Friends Who Lost Children.

"I have friends in Somerville who lost their children through poisonous vaccination. I am in mortal terror of vaccination. I have had one experience with it already. Elmer, my ten-year-old boy, was vaccinated on the leg when he was a baby. He became very sick and a bad sore developed. I was terribly worried and even feared at one time that we would lose him. Elmer is living to-day and is in school, but he is not a strong boy and I am not sure how much vaccination is responsible for it.

"Not only do I not believe in compulsory vaccination, but I disapprove of this extensive medical inspection and treatment of school children by school doctors, especially in such districts as Dorchester. It may be all right to have a school doctor examine and treat children's eyes, ears, noses and so on in some of the tenement districts. But in a district where parents are taxpayers and are able to provide medical attendance for their children, I think it would be sufficient if the teacher sent a note home and called the parents' attention to any illness of the child. And I particularly do not believe in children being forced to undergo vaccination in order to attend the public schools."

FATHER OF 32 DYING.

John W. Guy Has Lived a Romantic Life.

CAPE CHARLES, Va., Nov. 4.—John W. Guy, father of more children than any other known man in the country, is dangerously ill at his home near Melfa.

Mr. Guy is seventy-nine and father of thirty-two children. He has been thrice married, and there was enough romance in one of his marriages to write him down as a Romeo at the time. Besides, marriages by a son of his first wife and of a daughter of a second wife to a brother of Mrs. Guy have made him brother-in-law to two of his children.

OUR GRANDMOTHERS USED SAGE TEA TO RESTORE COLOR TO GRAY AND FADED HAIR

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for their hair and are fast following suit.

The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready-to-use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy. As a scalp tonic and color restorer this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers.

This remedy is sold under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

If your hair is losing color or coming out, start using Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur to-day, and see what a change it will make in a few days' time.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

GOVERNOR FOSS PREDICTS SWEEPING VICTORY ON TUESDAY

Tells Why the People Rally to Support of His Administration

REASONS FOR G. O. P. DEFEAT GREATER TO-DAY THAN IN THE CAMPAIGN OF A YEAR AGO

Governor, Confident of the Support of the Great Mass of the People, Reviews the Advance Made During His Year in Office, and Declares His Defeat Would Mean a Setback for Progressive Policies

By the HON. EUGENE N. FOSS, Governor of Massachusetts.

Written Expressly For the Sunday American

I AM glad to say a last word in this campaign to the people of my State who read the AMERICAN.

Before passing [illegible] campaign issues I want to say a word to my friends, to those who have already made up their minds whom they wish to be their next Governor, and who wish me well.

I am tremendously confident of the result, for I know that the confidence of the people in my administration has been steadily increasing from the start.

They know that I have now had a year's experience and that in every case I have used this experience to build up broader policies and larger measures of usefulness to the people of this State.

Hence, their confidence in me has increased rapidly and I can see no reason why my plurality should not greatly exceed that of last year.

The people are not asking better security for my performances than just my promises, which they were willing to accept last year. I have performed. I have met each of my obligations as fast as they have matured.

Now I have established my credit with the people. Last year they took me on faith. They do not have to take me on my faith any more. In business, if a man had met his obligations as well as I have met my obligations to the people of Massachusetts, his credit would be good, as a matter of course.

Last year the workingmen were a little suspicious of me, as they usually are of men who have been successful in big business. There is a brutality about the law of the survival of the fittest, which is the law of success in big business, that makes workingmen hesitate before they put their interests in the hands of a man who has survived the fierce struggle of business.

As a public servant, the workingmen did not know me last year, but they know me now. They know that under my administration they received more legislation for the betterment of their conditions than they had ever received under any other two administrations. They know that I have kept my promises to them in letter and spirit.

The workingmen know that during my administration the eight-hour bill, for which they fought so long, has become a law. They know that a law was passed reducing the hours during which women and children may work in our factories to fifty-four hours a week.

LAW SAFEGUARDING RIGHTS OF LABOR.

They know that a law safeguarding their liberty was passed this year, and the value of that law cannot be overestimated. Before it was passed, a workingman could be thrown into jail by a judge for contempt without a trial by jury, without the right to appeal, and without limit of sentence.

Our constitution guarantees to us all a right of a trial by jury when we are charged with crime and we have the right of appeal if the trial court has committed an error of law and statutes always fix the shortest and the longest sentence that can be imposed. But the courts had fallen into the habit of substituting, especially in the case of workingmen on a strike, their injunctions for the criminal statutes and jailing the workingman for contempt without the protection of a trial by a jury of his peers, the same judge acting both as judge and jury, imposing a sentence limited only by his own discretion and not by any statute; and from which there could be no appeal.

I recommended in my inaugural that this arbitrary power be taken away from the judges and the Legislature passed a bill which I signed, taking it away. This ends a grievance which the representatives of the workingmen have thundered against at the State House for years.

Under my administration a pension system for State employes was established.

A board to report on the minimum rate of wages for women was also secured this year.

Then the workingmen's compensation act was passed. This law provides immediate justice for workingmen injured at their work. It does away with legal expenses and long and costly and doubtful lawsuits. The law is not yet in perfect form, but it will be perfected.

Am I not justified in believing that the workingmen who supported me last year on the strength of mere promises, will support me this year, now that I have made good those promises?

But the votes of the workingmen were not all you received last year. I can hear some pessimists say. That is true. I received the votes of many thousand independent, progressive Republicans.

Some of them supported me because they were determined to destroy the Republican machine which every year has been narrowing the magic circle within which the all public honors and even business privileges.

Some of them voted for me because the cost of living under the tariff has become so unbearable.

Some of them voted for me because they do not like the whole tendency of the present machine under the control of Senators Lodge and Crane. They want the Republican party to be progressive.

Why should I lose the votes of the Progressive Independent Republicans this year? Am I less progressive now than I was last year? Is the Republican machine more progressive than it was last year? Is the Republican candidate more progressive than Mr. Draper? I stand for exactly the principle which forms the ark of the covenant of the Progressive Republican leaders in the country. Senators La Follette, Cummins, Bristow, Borah, Bourne Clapp, Crawford, Works, Beveridge and Garfield, Pinchot and Roosevelt.

The entire platform of the national Progressive Republican organization certain these policies. The initiative, the referendum and recall, direct nominations and a rigid corrupt practices law.

In my inaugural address I recommended the adoption of every one of these splendid policies to restore our governments to the people. I shall recommend them again at the next inauguration, and, if I am supported by a friendly Legislature, we will make them a part of the political institutions of our State.

Now on the other hand, was the Republican party ever more reactionary and standpat than it is this year? Did the Republican platform ever use so many words which meant nothing as their platform this year? I suppose that they felt that they had to make it harmonize with their candidate, Mr. Frothingham, who is so colorless himself.

Is not the Republican machine just as much in control of Senator Lodge as ever? Did he not lay out the lines on which the Republican campaign must be fought in his speech at Hamilton last Summer, when he told how the mills would close if I were re-elected? Is not Mr. Frothingham mine

WHAT DO YOU KNOW ABOUT FROTHINGHAM?

Study His Record as Set Down in Official Journals at the State House and You Will Agree With Us That There Is As Much Chance of His Election to the Governorship as There Is That the November Moon Will Tumble Into the Ocean

CHOSE cunning old gentlemen who hold the Republican machine of Massachusetts in the hollow of their hands, Winthrop Murray Crane and Henry Cabot Lodge, issued orders this year that Republican orators were to "MAKE THE FIGHT ON THE TARIFF." Mr. Lodge sounded the keynote at Hamilton last July, in the presence of President Taft. Then and there began the talk of CLOSING THE MILLS in the event of Governor Foss's re-election.

Eugene N. Foss, with the spunkiness characteristic of the sons of his native State, proved entirely willing to meet Mr. Crane and Mr. Lodge at their own game and on their own grounds. When the tariff battle was fairly at an end, last night the cranelodge mammikins had been driven from the field with heavy losses. From Newburyport to Sandisfield everybody is to-day aware that the Republican bosses have been beaten again by the most progressive Governor who ever occupied the executive chair on Beacon Hill.

And yet Mr. Crane and Mr. Lodge acted wisely in their effort to get as far away from State issues as possible. To have talked about Massachusetts would have been to centre the spotlight in this campaign on THE YOUNG MAN WHOM CRANE AND LODGE PICKED OUT for the governorship.

Lodge and Crane chose the tariff to talk about in the hope that the PEOPLE MIGHT FORGET MR. FROTHINGHAM ENTIRELY. Mr. Frothingham had a "record."

Any sane man, studying the legislative "record" of Louis A. Frothingham, will wonder however, that Crane and Lodge had the audacity to let him run for Governor. If Mr. Frothingham's record is well known to the voters of Massachusetts—which we trust it may be before Tuesday—there is ABOUT AS MUCH CHANCE OF HIS ELECTION AS THERE IS THAT THE NOVEMBER MOON WILL TUMBLE INTO THE ATLANTIC OCEAN.

No man with a record like Louis A. Frothingham's can EVER be elected Governor of this Commonwealth. The time for the election of any machine-made candidate has GONE BY.

There are only TWO COURSES OPEN to the young man who seeks distinction in politics. He has got to climb by merit, industry and devotion to THE PUBLIC WEAL, or else he has got to be subservient to a machine which lives on the contributions of VESTED PRIVILEGE. Mr. Frothingham has reached such a height in politics as has seldom been gained by men with an hundredfold his ability. How has he achieved it? Search his record for the answer.

What do YOU know about Frothingham, you who read this newspaper? How are YOU going to judge of his fitness for the governorship, except you know what he has done at the State House?

The Republican candidate for Governor was a member of the House of Representatives in 1901, 1902, 1903, 1904 and 1905. The journals of the House of Representatives for these years give us this information about him:

LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing for the INITIATIVE AND REFERENDUM.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the principles of DIRECT NOMINATIONS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the principles of DIRECT ELECTION OF UNITED STATES SENATORS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing for JURY TRIAL IN CONTEMPT CASES.

LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST allowing BOSTON POLICEMEN ONE DAY OFF IN TWENTY-SEVEN. ARE NOW RECEIVING ONE DAY OFF IN FIFTEEN.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the GENERAL POLICEMAN PENSION BILL.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the PEACEFUL PERSUASION BILL.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST various BILLS TENDING TO ALLEVIATE PUBLIC DISTRESS by providing work on State highways, and otherwise.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill to REGULATE the HOURS OF LABOR OF NURSES IN HOSPITALS AND ASYLUMS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill making TWELVE HOURS IN TWENTY-FOUR A DAY'S LABOR IN FIRE DEPARTMENTS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill to RENDER ENFORCIBLE THE EIGHT-HOUR LAW.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST INVESTIGATING conditions in textile factories, relative to OVERTIME WORK BY WOMEN AND MINORS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing for the LICENSING OF BARBERS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST an order for the INVESTIGATION OF GAS COMPANIES in Boston, as to the fairness of charges for gas.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing for twelve-ride tickets on railroads BETWEEN BOSTON AND THE SUBURBS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill for NINETY-CENT GAS IN BOSTON.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the bill to authorize CITIES AND TOWNS to establish and ACQUIRE GAS AND ELECTRIC PLANTS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill to regulate, by placing a MAXIMUM FARE of TWO CENTS PER MILE on standard gauge railroads.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST an order REQUIRING RAILROADS to SUBMIT A LIST OF FREE PASSES ISSUED BY THEM.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill FORBIDDING the sale of GAS CONTAINING AN EXCESS OF POISON.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST giving the STATE BOARD OF HEALTH POWER TO FIX WATER RATES upon appeal by towns.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing a PENALTY FOR COMBINATIONS TO RAISE THE PRICE OF COAL.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill providing for a REFERENDUM UPON GRANTS OF FRANCHISES BY MUNICIPALITIES.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a REDUCTION OF TELEPHONE CHARGES in the Boston, Suburban and Metropolitan Districts.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill to COMPEL RAILROADS TO PROVIDE MORE THAN ONE BRAKEMAN ON FREIGHT TRAINS.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST the bill providing for a TAX ON LEGACIES.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill authorizing and compelling assessors to obtain a more complete disclosure of taxable personal property.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST a bill to EXTEND THE SCOPE OF THE PURE FOOD LAW.
LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM voted AGAINST A NEW STATE SANITARIUM FOR TUBERCULAR PATIENTS.

Can any PROGRESSIVE citizen, of WHATEVER PARTY, vote for Louis A. Frothingham after a study of his record? We think not. We believe that Eugene N. Foss, even without the splendid achievements of his first year in the Governor's office, should be—and WILL be—re-elected ON LOUIS A. FROTHINGHAM'S RECORD OF ABJECT SERVITUDE to the monied interests and to the dictates of the [illegible].

If there isn't any law to make politics an open field for the average man, then I propose to see if we can't get one. I should frame that statute pre[illegible] to c[illegible] what the Republican corporations have been doing in this campaign.

"They say there is no penalty [illegible] the present statutes. Well, what [illegible] is in? What difference does it make to a corporation what the amount of a [illegible]? A conviction, for an individual, is penalty enough. But there is a general [illegible] in our statutes empowering the judge to fix the penalty when none is [illegible] in the act itself. And each statute [illegible] specify both a fine and imprisonment.

"I rather think that the Republican corporations are not sure of their argument themselves. My warning has had the desired effect and the corporations will probably get rid of their money in some other way.

"They might hire a hall and have the stand-pat tariff Senators speak on 'revision with an axe' and 'a [illegible] revision with special reference to the Lodge [illegible] put the Massachusetts [illegible] and shoe industry and our sole leather industry on a free-trade basis and with reference to his aid to the President in striking down in secret the Massachusetts manufacturers of news and book paper."

Besides the Governor, Candidates David I. Walsh for Lieutenant-Governor, Frank J. Donahue for Secretary, Augustus L. Thorndike for Treasurer, Charles B. Strecker for Auditor, George W. Anderson for Attorney-General and John F. Cronin for clerk of the Supreme Judicial Court, spoke at all the Boston rallies. Dudley Field Malone, first assistant corporation counsel of the city of New York, spoke at the Roxbury and Dorchester high school.

Other speakers in Boston rallies were Mayor John F. Fitzgerald, Sherman L. Whipple, James H. Vahey, Congressman Andrew J. Peters, James M. C[illegible], William F. Murray, Joseph [illegible] O'Conn[illegible], John R. Murphy, Thomas A. M[illegible], Thomas F. Riley and Michael L. S[illegible] of Salem.

Candidates for Senate and House addressed rallies held in their respective districts.

Fitzgerald Attacks the Trusts.

Mayor Fitzgerald loaded upon the Republican party full responsibility for the existence of such trusts as the United States Steel and showed how, year after year, the burden placed upon the backs of the people had increased.

"The Republican orators tell you," said the Mayor, "that business depression will follow the re-election of Governor Foss. How many of these calamity shriekers have done one part of what Eugene N. Foss has done for the building up of industries in Massachusetts? Himself a manufacturer and [illegible] reasoning and sensible man believe that Governor Foss would take any step to [illegible] personal [illegible]. [illegible]

Fitzgerald for Vaster Exports

Mayor Fitzgerald [illegible] said:

"With a lower tariff on [illegible] the people of the [illegible] get cheaper goods and be [illegible] the markets of the world [illegible] as we are [illegible].

"Boston is [illegible] the growth of the [illegible] lines of manufacture [illegible] ready the country [illegible] year to show an export [illegible] in manufactured goods.

"A country [illegible] enable us [illegible] rest of the world.

"Too much [illegible] makes manufacturers depend [illegible]. The enormous [illegible] American manufacturers [illegible] in our present tariff laws [illegible] here in America [illegible] high a price that they [illegible].

"The markets of the world are what New England needs, what Boston requires [illegible] what we will get eventually if Massachusetts stands [illegible] and the men nominated on the Democratic ticket."

Walsh Gives an Ovation.

David I. Walsh was received with fully [the] enthusiasm accorded the Governor.

"The Republicans have attempted to intimidate the toilers of the State," said Mr. [Walsh], "with the open threat that if Governor [Foss] should be re-elected the mills [would] close or at least wages would be [cut].

"Such a threat served its purpose in [illegible] it served again in 1908 but the [illegible] any such chaff.

"Governor Foss has shown beyond controversy that those who are shouting [illegible] about the closing of the mills as a [result] of the Democratic victory we are [to] have Tuesday are the very ones whose profits of more than 500 per cent have [been wrung] from the brain and brawn of [illegible] and the toiler until around election [illegible] forgotten by those who fatten [illegible].

"We are going to win this year as we [did] last year. We are going to win because [illegible] the issues the people know [illegible] and because on State issues [illegible] know that Governor Foss has been a progressive, energetic and sincere head of the State. [illegible]"

Congressman Peters held the tariff policy of the Republicans to be indefensible and contrary to all the principles of economics and good sense. Such an unnatural [illegible] increased cost to the consumer and ultimately to commercial instability.

"In contrast [illegible] expensive tariff policy which the Republicans advocate, stands the sane and logical policy of the Democratic party. We do not believe in the tariff as a benefit, we believe in it as a tax. The Democrats stand for a reduction of the tariff to a revenue basis, a tariff which lays on the consumer the least burden and which arranges its rates, not as gifts for favored supporters of any party, but as taxes to be so placed that the revenue of the Government may be collected with as little burden as possible to its people."

Curley Appeals for Labor.

Congressman Curley said in part:

"What the American wage-earner desires is simply a fair chance. He does not for one moment desire charity. He does want employment at fair wages, when with his splendid ability he will earn every penny of an honest wage by reason of his producing capacity, no matter what may [be paid] in the congested manufacturing centres of Europe for the same line of work.

"I want to see the day come in the United States when the American manufacturer [can] buy his raw material where he can buy it the cheapest. Give him this opportunity and the American [illegible] compete [illegible] with [illegible] be able to [illegible] our product [illegible]. Then, and then alone, will we [illegible] the promise of [illegible] employment [illegible] American [illegible] given at good wages.

"[illegible] take [illegible] capacity of [illegible] American work[men] to the same extent."

GOV. FOSS ANSWERS G. O. P. "COST OF LIVING" CRY

"I told the people that my election would help to bring about a downward revision, and it did. The new Democratic House of Representatives and the new Democratic Senators combining with the progressive Republicans in the Senate, passed a bill revising the Payne-Aldrich bill downward. Prices began to fall when this revision was being made, and had it become a law the people would have seen a change for the better.

"But, unfortunately, President Taft, wrongfully advised by the stand-pat Republicans, vetoed the bill and the Payne-Aldrich law still remains upon the statute books.

"Those who voted for me on account of the high cost of living know to-day that I told the truth when I said that my election would help to compel a tariff revision downward. It did help, but it did not help enough to pass the bill over the President's veto."—Governor Foss in statement to the Sunday American.

CHAIRMAN HATFIELD'S FINAL CLAIMS FOR THE REPUBLICAN TICKET

"Our carefully compiled returns show that the Republicans throughout the state are united and enthusiastic in the support of Mr. Frothingham and the entire state ticket.

Mr. Frothingham will be elected by more than [illegible]."—Statement by Charles I. Hatfield, Chairman of the Republican State Committee.

Strecker Confident for Auditor.

Charles B. Strecker, candidate for Auditor, said:

"The record of Mr. Frothingham is well known to the people of this State. He has consistently voted against those things which tend for the betterment and uplifting of every man, woman and child in this Commonwealth, always voting with a few against [illegible] never [illegible] advocating or advancing any progressive measures. Against the record of that of the Governor, and it will be sufficient to say that he stands for and has advocated and signed such measures as are absolutely the [illegible] of those voted against by Mr. Frothingham, always having in mind his duty to the people of the Commonwealth.

"The man whom I am opposing for State Auditor has a legislative record as bad as that of Mr. Frothingham. He also has voted against the people. Here are some of the measures which he voted against—Fifty-four hour bill for women and children. Direct election of United States Senators. Income tax. Public opinion bill. Eight-hour bill. Bill relating to hours of labor for street railway employes. Peaceful picketing bill. Anti-padrone bill.

"And for these votes, undoubtedly dictated by the machine of which he is a part, and also because he voted steadily for the re-election of Henry Cabot Lodge as Senator from Massachusetts, he was rewarded by a Republican House and Senate by being elected to fill the unexpired term of this office, made possible [by the] death of Henry A. Turner. Is it [illegible] for me to say that this man in the discharge of his duties will ever bear in mind the machine and the man who placed him there? He has never been elected to this office by the people of this Commonwealth and I believe he never will be. I will be the next State Auditor.

"When I am elected, I will not audit for the Democratic party alone. I will not audit for the Republican party alone. I will audit for every man, woman and child in this great Commonwealth, and, at the same time, use my best endeavors to bring reforms and economy, if possible, to this office.

"The fundamental question in this campaign is whether the people will control the machinery of government in the interest of all alike, or will continue to be controlled by trusts and the money power. Or, to state it in another way, the question is, whether legislation shall be in the interest of all citizens alike or whether the policy of the Republican party of granting special legislative favors to the few shall be continued.

"The last session of the Legislature in this Commonwealth, at the instance of Governor Foss and under Democratic leadership, passed a series of enactments for bettering the condition of labor more beneficial and more enlightened than any legislation on the subject in years. Governor Foss also recommended and the Legislature enacted other legislation for the assistance of the weaker and less fortunate members of society. The bill to protect poor people from the greed and selfishness of loan sharks, the bill to compensate a man held without bail for trial when he is proved to be innocent, the bill for raising the standard of administration of institutions for the poor are illustrations.

"A Disgracefully Rich Few."

"The claim of the Democrats for the election of their ticket and control of the Legislature rest in this: that while the Republicans have been engaged in legislating in the way which I have indicated above, in the interests of a few, and a disgracefully rich few, the Democrats in the last Legislature of Massachusetts, under the influence and leadership of Governor Foss, have passed bills in the general interest of the community and for the especial care of its industrial workers and those who really need legislative aid.

BIG REPUBLICAN RALLY IN TREMONT TEMPLE

The Republican campaign for Frothingham and Luce came to [a close in Tremont] Temple last night, when one of the largest and most enthusiastic audiences [illegible] greeted the candidates [illegible] cheered attacks made by prominent party men on Governor Foss [illegible] for which he stands.

It was an enthusiastic Republican audience and the candidates were made to feel from the minute Samuel J. Elder called the meeting to order until it was closed [by] Former Governor John L. [Bates] [illegible] they were in the house of their friends.

Lieutenant Governor [Frothingham] was the first speaker, and he was greeted with cheers that lasted for [illegible] when he arose to speak. It was a [illegible] of the reception accorded him a [illegible] two before when he [made] his appearance on the platform.

Mr. Frothingham began his remarks by recounting his history as a resident of Boston and then proceeded to attack the State [illegible] favored by Governor Foss, declaring that it was an attack on the principle [of home rule] for cities and towns.

Would Enforce Labor Laws.

He declared that he would favor a finance commission plan that would properly safeguard those municipalities which conducted their business properly, but declared that the kind of a finance commission Governor Foss wanted was originated solely for political effect.

He also declared that he would enforce all labor laws and devoted considerable time to the [illegible] of the experts employed by the government to look into financial methods of [illegible] institutions. He promised that if elected he will visit the institutions himself and discover how things are managed.

Congressman Samuel W. McCall of Winchester followed [illegible] Governor Frothingham and former Governor John L. Bates spoke after him. Robert Luce, the candidate for lieutenant-governor, pleaded for support for every member on the Republican ticket, mentioning each by name and giving his qualifications.

Congressman Wallis of Ohio also urged the defeat of Governor Foss, and delivered a tariff speech.

Lieutenant-Governor Frothingham said in part:

Mr. Frothingham's Speech.

"I stand before you a candidate for Governor and one who is going to be elected on Tuesday next.

"Imbued from youth with the spirit of liberty, for which Boston stands and which has marked her as a brilliant light in the pages of history, I advocate now what I always have believed, that the cities and towns of this Commonwealth should not be throttled and smothered by State control and supervision, but should be [left] with a measure of responsibility and independence that will continue to make their citizens take pride and interest in the control of their affairs.

"I favor and shall advocate a consistent and healthful degree of home rule for cities and towns of this Commonwealth. The State has taken over many of the cares, duties and privileges of our cities and towns. If it goes too far in this direction, the people will lose the pride they now take in their local affairs. The power to deal with and manage their own affairs to a great extent are necessary stimulants to local interest and initiative.

"I resent the lip service in favor of home rule at one end of the body, and the crunching under foot of home rule at the other end of the body.

"I believe in a finance commission properly safe-guarded, for the supervision of the transactions of State officials, but I do not believe in one that is created for political purposes, nor in one that was advocated as was that of last Winter, to supervise and control the Cities and Towns of the Commonwealth, regardless of whether or not they had managed their affairs well, and without giving their representatives the least semblance of notice or opportunity for hearing.

The Foundry Question.

"Neither do I believe that the man who extends one hand to labor in friendship while he strikes at it with the other is a friend of labor. I stand positively for the enforcement of all labor laws; I believe in the improvement of labor conditions for the benefit of people who toil in Massachusetts. It is for this reason that I have stated on many occasions, and state again this evening, that I favor a measure prohibiting the employment of women and girls in founderies. The laws regulating the sanitary conditions in mills and factories should be rigidly enforced, and, if need be, further extended.

"After many years service in the State government as a representative of the people, I shall enter upon my duties as Governor when elected, as I shall be on Tuesday next, with some knowledge of the laws relating to that office and of the responsibilities and duties connected therewith. I shall see to it as Governor, as I have seen to it as Lieutenant-Governor, that the requirements of the constitution [illegible] of the Commonwealth, relating to the office I [hold], are carried out.

"I shall [not] seek to [illegible] shift those responsibilities to the shoulders of others but shall visit the great institutions of the Commonwealth myself and see that they are administered on a broad and comprehensive basis. I shall neither increase the expenses of the State by asking the taxpayers to pay for someone else to visit the institutions for me, nor shall I use their money for the employment of anyone to write my messages to the Legislature. I intend to be Governor of the Commonwealth in fact, as well as in name.

The Pension Issue.

"I shall not promise to reduce the number of commissions and then proceed to increase them, as was done this year on Beacon Hill. I do promise, however, to look into the workings of every commission, and if I find that the business of the Commonwealth demands a change in its personnel or the abolition of the commission I shall make recommendations to put the same into effect.

"We have in the employ of our Government many who have given long and faithful service; they deserve well of the State in their old age, and I believe a comprehensive study should be made of the subject of pensions, particularly for the benefit of those who have rendered hazardous service and have offered their lives for the protection of our persons and property.

"Appreciating as I do that the welfare of the country depends on its agricultural success, I am a firm believer in the betterment of the farming conditions of Massachusetts. I shall make it my special duty to bring the farmers of Massachusetts, the real producers, into closer contact with the real consumers."

Luce Criticizes Foss.

Robert Luce reviewed the entire campaign and argumets that have been advanced by the Republicans. He contended that Governor Foss has answered none of them, and said:

"We have produced a mass of evidence [of] the Governor Foss's relations with the Legislature and the public has shown a lack of candor, accuracy and persistance with which the people have been unfamiliar in their chief executive. Putting it in a [illegible] way, he has been phenomenally vacillating. Besides this, we aver that he has not carried on the people's business with well-balanced vigor and energy. He has promised much that he could not perform. There is [illegible] that he has not performed."

Mr. Luce criticized the Governor because he has not appointed the board of directors for the port of Boston, which will have the expenditure of the $9,000,000 appropriated by the last Legislature for the development of the water front.

EVIDENCE OF VOTE BUYING IN CITY OF NEW BEDFORD

NEW BEDFORD, Nov. 4.—Inspector Thomas A. Thompson of the State Police, who with five officers, has been investigating charges of vote buying in New Bedford, declared in an interview here tonight:

"We found conditions in New Bedford very bad. There certainly has been questionable practice here and we have secured evidence which we are holding and which may result in prosecutions."

The State Police have been in New Bedford some days, but their presence was not discovered until to-day. They have been going about saloons and clubs and have been endeavoring to get direct evidence of the vote buying charged by Governor Foss.

Inspector Thompson said he would keep his men in New Bedford until after Tuesday and watch the election very closely.

Governor Reviews His Administration and Tells Why Democrats Should Win.

ing Lodge [illegible] that he is? Is he not going up and down the State telling the workmen at the mills will [close] if I am [elected]? Is not Senator Lodge directing the Republican State Committee [illegible]?

They say that [illegible] stump during this campaign. [illegible] does not mean anything.

"Lodge, the Party Boss."

It is not Senator Lodge, the public speaker, whom the people despise. It is Senator Lodge the party boss whom they despise. They admire his forensic and literary ability and they would even admire his knowledge of the history of his country, if the character of his [public] service did not show that [he] has failed to understand the [illegible] great [illegible] national development and to read correctly the warnings of our history.

Mr. Lodge is still the boss and he showed his power even over the legislation when the State Finance Commission bill was killed and when the resolution demanding that the National government protect our Jewish citizens in Russia was destroyed by amendments so that the Jews declared it "worse than useless."

Am I not justified in believing that those independent Republicans who voted for me at the last election because they were opposed to a Lodge bossed party machine will vote for me again this year. They know that it is the same old machine using the same old methods of killing off able men who have a mind of their own and who might once in a while question the wisdom and authority of the [illegible] tolerating, as of old, only men who would obey.

Consider what Speaker Walker said at a recent public meeting when he realized that the machine was killing him off for his independence, and was advancing Mr. Frothingham who knows only how to obey. Speaker Walker said: "The existing Republican machine here in Massachusetts has [become] a faction within the party. It is at the present moment much more interested in retaining its grip on the party than in the success of the party at the polls. It fights any member of the party who shows the slightest independence. This machine is determined to rule the party and is fast ruining it. Why am I today opposed by the Republican machine? Is it because I am not true to the interests of the people? Is it because I am not true to the fundamental principles of the Republican party? Is it because I have not stood by the wise and progressive policies of a great Republican President? No. It is simply because I would not bow my neck to the yoke of the Republican machine and follow the leadership in which I do not believe and in which the rank and file of the party have lost confidence."

People Not Ignorant of Events.

Many of the Republican leaders pretend to believe that I shall lose the support of those who voted for me on account of the high cost of living. They are wrong. The people are not so ignorant of conditions and events as the Republican leaders consider them.

The people know that the cost of living is as high now as last year, and I said during the last campaign I said it would remain high until that example of party perfidy called the Payne-Aldrich bill was revised downward. I told the people that my election would help to bring about a downward revision, and it did. The new Democratic House of Representatives and the new Democratic Senators combining with the progressive Republicans in the Senate passed a bill revising the Payne-Aldrich bill downward. Prices began to fall when this revision was being made, and had it become a law the people would have seen a change for the better.

But, unfortunately, President Taft wrongfully advised by the stand-pat Republicans, vetoed the bill and the Payne-Aldrich law still remains upon the statute books.

Those who voted for me on account of the high cost of living know to-day that I told the truth when I said that my election would help to compel a tariff revision downward. It did help, but it did not help enough to pass the bill over the President's veto.

The issue is the same to-day. This election will affect the matter of tariff revision a great deal. It is the most important election before the assembling of the next national convention soon to be held. Lodge and Crane are known throughout the nation as stand pat Senators, the lieutenants of Aldrich in revising the tariff upwards. The nation knows that these stand pat Senators control the present Republican machine and the present Republican candidate for Governor. The country knows also that Mr. Frothingham is obeying orders from higher up when he tells the workingmen that they will be out of work if the tariff is revised downwards by Democrats and that Senator Lodge is even advocating that the tariff be raised on shoes.

The High Cost of Living

If the stand pat machine is returned to power in this State under these circumstances it will discourage the progressive movement in the whole country and will be a serious blow to the prospect of honest tariff revision downward.

The reason for re-electing me on account of the high cost of living is stronger to-day than it was last year, because to-day they know how much influence this State election will have upon the tariff revision and they know how the tariff keeps up everything but wages. Last year they did [not] know these things, but had to take my word for them.

Have they scared the workingmen into believing that my [election] [illegible] the closing of the mills and [illegible]? If anyone [illegible] ended some [illegible].

[illegible] know a thing [illegible] protective [illegible] wages are higher than in [illegible] of France [illegible] protective [illegible] real wages in England [illegible] are as high [illegible] here. They know in this country the lowest wages are paid in the most highly protected industries and that the highest wages are paid to workers [in industries that have] no protective tariff.

[illegible] similar trades who have [no] tariff receive two and three times the wages in this country than in England [illegible] practically no difference between the wages of the mill operatives in the protected industries in America and the unprotected industries of England.

While us American manufacturers are asking for tariff protection against cheap European [labor], [European manu]facturers are asking for tariff protection against the higher paid and more skilful American labor.

No working[man] [illegible] that I will harm the industries [illegible] of Massachusetts. [illegible] I was born [illegible] a New England town [illegible] was so [illegible] pay our ministers in potatoes and cabbage.

I came to Massachusetts with nothing but confidence that a young man could succeed here as well as in the West. For thirty years I worked longer hours and [harder] than any of my employes building up Massachusetts enterprises.

When a destructive fire gave me a chance to take one of my industries West, faith in Massachusetts kept it here.

The people of Massachusetts have generously heaped public honor upon me. In this State good fortune has smiled upon me in public and private affairs.

How then can any man believe that I would advocate a policy that was harmful to the industries of Massachusetts. No one does [illegible] my stand-pat Republican friends pretend to believe it.

As you go to the election with me, am I not justified in saying that I shall win by an overwhelming majority.

(Signed), EUGENE N. FOSS.

SHERMAN L. WHIPPLE MAKES THE CLOSING ARGUMENT FOR THE PEOPLE AGAINST VESTED PRIVILEGE IN MASSACHUSETTS--A TRIBUTE TO EUGENE N. FOSS

Confident That the Governor Will Be Re-elected the Day After To-morrow, Because He "Cannot Believe That This Bitter and Cheap Abuse Can Seriously Affect Gov. Foss in Minds of the People

SHERMAN L. WHIPPLE, DISTINGUISHED ATTORNEY, ELOQUENT ORATOR, SOLDIER OF THE COMMON GOOD, WHO FLAYS THE STANDPATTER AND STRIKES A POWERFUL BLOW FOR FOSS AND DEMOCRATIC TICKET

Distinguished Boston Attorney Finds a Similarity Between the Abuse Heaped Upon Governor Foss and That Which Was Heaped Upon Lincoln, Garrison, Wendell Phillips and Other Pubic Men

THIS is the most important page of to-day's issue of the Boston Sunday AMERICAN. Every word upon this page should be read and considered by every registered voter in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Our readers in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island will find it equally helpful and important. The great problems of the States are identical.

Mr. Sherman L. Whipple, progressive Democrat, needs no introduction to the people of New England. Mr. Whipple is one of the most distinguished of American attorneys. His wonderful ability is acknowledged everywhere. His integrity has never been questioned.

Descended from old Massachusetts stock—the founder of the family settled at Ipswich in 1634—Mr. Whipple is a native of New Hampshire. It may surprise many who have followed his career in the public press to learn that he is less than 50 years of age.

Mr. Whipple was the nominee of the Democrats in the Legislature last January for United States Senator.

At the cost of considerable personal discomfort—he has been busy every day in the courts and has appeared almost nightly on the stump—Mr. Whipple, at the request of the Sunday AMERICAN, has prepared this elaborate review summing up the State campaign in Massachusetts. [illegible] we urge every reader of the Sunday AMERICAN to read every word of this review.

A REVIEW OF THE CAMPAIGN.

By SHERMAN L. WHIPPLE.

The Issues

The fundamental issue to-day dividing the Democratic and Republican parties is the question whether the policy shall be continued of granting special legislative favors and privileges to the few, or whether there shall be equal right and equal opportunity for all alike.

If the issues discussed in the campaign which is closing are analyzed, whether State or national, they will be found to rest fundamentally upon this underlying controversy between the parties.

The Republican party has stood for years as the representative of the wealthier classes and has been sponsor for those special legislative privileges which have built up enormous individual fortunes.

On the other hand, the Democratic party has stood and stands for the principle that if legislative favors are to be granted [illegible] not to the rich, to those who are able to care for themselves, but to those classes in the community whose struggle for existence is hard and difficult as the result either of misfortune, improvidence or incapacity.

It is apparently the belief of those who control the councils of the Republican party that the prosperity of the country rests upon successful business and accumulation therefrom of enormous profits, even though such profits create enormous fortunes in the hands of a few.

The Democracy stands, on the other hand, for the principle that the prosperity of the nation rests, not upon the prosperity of a favored few, but upon the general well-being and happiness of its great body of industrial workers and wage-earners who are the foundation support of industry and commerce; that the State owes to these workers a duty to see that they are furnished with suitable and comfortable homes, wholesome, nourishing food, protecting raiment, and that they be called upon to work only during a period of hours best calculated to conserve their health and vigor.

It is further a Democratic doctrine that the distribution of wealth—the result of industry—has been most unfair, and that the swollen fortunes resulting from special legislative favor are a menace to the integrity of our institutions.

Nothing could more effectually accentuate the truth of these statements than the attitude of the large corporations and the wealthier classes during this campaign. It is well recognized that they all stand solidly behind the candidacy of Mr. Frothingham; some of them indeed have gone to the extent of expending very large sums in political advertisements throughout the State evidently directed to the promotion of the election of the Republican ticket and the defeat of Governor Foss and his associates.

This fundamental controversy between the parties is not one confined by the limits of the State or even of the nation. The movement which is founded upon the principles for which the Democratic party stands extends to the limits of civilization. The struggle of Democracy in America is but a phase of that movement which in England, under the enlightened leadership of David Lloyd George, has emancipated the people from the domination of the vested privilege of the House of Lords; which in Germany has made the welfare of the industrial laborers the special object of the Government's legislative care; which in Russia has recently declared the dawn of popular government and which to-day in China has developed and declared the overthrow of autocracy. The widespread and overwhelming victories of the Democratic party last year declared the approval by the people of the liberal and progressive movement founded upon these principles—principles of equality, humanity and justice.

The Republican Party Divided.

It would not be fair to say that all members of the Republican party believe in or advocate the special legislative privilege to the few. The more honest and intelligent openly deplore this policy and the enormous and ill-gotten fortunes which have resulted. While it is their theory that the better classes, the more intelligent and capable, should rule, they believe they should rule not in the interest of the rich and more capable, but fairly and honorably in the interest of the people at large. They admit that crying injustice and dreadful abuses have resulted from these special privileges, but they deny that they are a necessary result of government by aristocracies.

The recognition of this plain injustice to the people and the menacing results which have followed upon special privilege, have caused a hopeless and bitter division among the Republicans. Many have altogether left the party and joined the Democrats. Many, also, while still bearing the party label, have declared revolt against the old regime of special legislative privilege and now stand upon the broad progressive principles of justice, equal right and equal opportunity to all. These men are termed progressive Republicans or insurgents, and so far as I can see their principles so resemble those of the Democracy that they must ultimately be aligned together. These are the men whom the Republican State platform denounces as "allies" of the Democrats, and the bitterness of the machine Republicans against them exceeds by far any bitterness they feel against the Democrats.

Again, there are honest men in the Republican party still standing for the [illegible] in the belief that the abuses which have grown up under Republican administration may be eradicated out of the party and their theory of aristocratic government thus saved.

It is the dishonest, the selfish and greedy of the "old guard" the machine, the "stand-patters," that insist upon the continuation of special legislative privilege. These men brazenly hold as a principle that the prosperity of the country is best subserved by keeping the wealth as well as the power of government concentrated in the hands of the dominating class. Their spirit—the spirit of the machine in control in this State—the spirit of the "stand patter," is expressed most concisely and emphatically if somewhat vulgarly in the recent language used by Speaker Cannon in an interview, in which he says:

> "If the Progressive Republicans do not get into line and the party is defeated in 1912, its members will go down to political purgatory for four years. We will serve our four years and take our medicine, but in 1916 we will come back and send that crowd to Hell."

What Is Special Legislative Privilege?

What do we mean when we speak of "special legislative privilege?" It may be defined as a special right or privilege granted by law to a particular individual or group of individuals. We can best understand it by illustrations. The simplest form of legislative privilege would be if Congress should grant to a person or group of persons a right, for his or their private benefit to levy upon the property of every person within a certain district a tax for his private and individual benefit. Such was the privilege granted by the Roman Republic to a successful general or statesman appointed as Governor of a province. The grant to a body of individuals of the right to construct a railroad to be operated for private profit, involving the right to condemn private property for its construction, is a form of legislative privilege common with us. Such a grant carries with it the power to control and determine the destinies of cities and towns by rate discrimination and by the granting of rebate or other favors to build up the fortunes of favored individuals and destroy the prosperity of others.

A still more familiar and common illustration is the imposition of a tariff duty upon commodities produced by certain manufacturers whereby these manufacturers are enabled to charge the community a price for their goods largely in excess of what the goods could be purchased for except for the tariff.

These legislative favors have always been granted by the Republican party to men of wealth, and out of them generally and usually they have added enormously to their fortunes. This explains their willingness now to spend lavishly in support of the party.

The principle for which Democracy contends is that legislative favors should not be granted, or if at all only to be exercised under a supervision and control that will prevent injustice or the accumulation of enormous fortunes; that if any legislative favors are to be granted, they should be given to those in the community who need and deserve them more. Democrats ask what justice is there in the enactment of a tariff bill giving protection and profit to the manufacturers without at the same time enacting a law which will give to the industrial worker a fair and reasonable measure of such profits. Why, we ask, should the community be taxed for the protection of the manufacturer in securing enormous profits without at the same time [illegible] [illegible] participation therein? Why, in other words, should the public be taxed for the benefit of the employer rather than the employe?

The employer who appears at Washington requesting the imposition of a tariff upon the commodities which he produces, whereby he is enabled to charge the price for his product which will give him a profit, always rests his appeal upon the fact that he pays a scale of wages higher than the foreign manufacturer [illegible] when a tariff is granted [illegible] of the wage of the [illegible] the scale prevalent [illegible]. It is an admitted [illegible] to-day that the [illegible] wage of the textile worker in New England but slightly exceeds $7 per week while in unprotected industries like street car conductors, motormen, shop clerks and the like, the wages paid are much larger.

Furthermore, no matter if the manufacturer as a result of the tariff in a given year may secure profits and pay dividends of 100 per cent, the employe is no sharer in this result of legislative favor.

Let us assume that in every tariff law where protection is granted to the manufacturer there was inserted a provision that after the payment of expenses, liberal salaries and a dividend of say 10 or 15 per cent, any surplus earnings or profits should be divided equally between the manufacturer and his employes. Such a stipulation would represent an equal right and equal opportunity before the law to the employe as well as the employer. It would represent a square deal in the division of profits founded upon legislative privilege; but whoever thought of suggesting in a tariff bill any such measure of justice to the employe as this? The manufacturer prates in Congress of the wages he has to pay, and thus secures his legislative favor but when he counts his enormous profits taken directly from the pockets of the people, he forgets to share this legislative favor with his employe.

The progressive movement means that in the future unfair legislative privilege to the few must be ousted, and that legislation shall care alike for all but more especially for those who are weak and unfortunate. It is in effect the declaration of a principle founded upon humanity—the principle of the responsibility of the more intelligent, more fortunate and more wealthy for the care of the less capable, less fortunate in the community. This responsibility cannot and ought not to be escaped or repudiated by the more fortunate classes and it is the lofty ideal of progressive democracy to see that the principle is enforced by reasonable, fair and just legislation.

The number of those who to-day challenge the principle that every man in the community should have an equal right and equal opportunity before the law, and that special legislative favors to enrich inordinately the few, should not be granted, is steadily growing less. In the development of loftier ideals of the duty of the community and government to its industrial workers and to the poor and unfortunate, even those who have profited by special legislative favors do not dare openly to defend the selfish greed which has hitherto actuated them. There are few now who deny the humane duty of the strong and powerful to care for the weak and less fortunate or the duty of the government to care particularly for its industrial workers and for those who have faltered in the terrible struggle for existence.

In determining, therefore, whether Governor Foss is entitled to re-election and whether the interests of the Commonwealth are best subserved by the election of his associates on the State ticket and a Democratic Legislature let us ascertain how these [illegible] legislative [illegible] record of the past [illegible] test of these enlightened and humane principles.

The Legislative and Administrative Record of the Democrats.

In the consideration of the record of legislation it should be remembered that while the Republicans were in a nominal majority, the progressive legislation enacted was carried through under Democratic leadership and by the votes of Democrats [illegible] [illegible] Transcript as "inert" and helpless.

Let us first review those measures proposed by Governor Foss in his inaugural, and enacted by the votes of Democrats and their allies, as affecting the industrial workers of the Commonwealth. [illegible] of these measures Governor Foss said in his inaugural:

> "Labor is the foundation upon which the structure of popular government is built, and as such it must be recognized. Its just demands [illegible] rights guarded and protected. It must have every legislative [illegible] that capital has."

The following were the bills enacted:

Workingmen's Compensation Law for Injured [illegible].

Fifty-four Hours a Week for Women [illegible].

Eight-hour [illegible] for Public [illegible].

Pensions [illegible] and City Laborers.

Investigation of Minimum Wage Legislation.

Plan to Assist Workmen to Secure Suburban Homesteads.

Every one of these bills represents but a fair measure of justice to those who earn their wages by daily toil. They represent [illegible] tardy, of [illegible] demands which have been made upon Republican legislators for years.

We are wont to claim in this land of liberty and equality that the people at large are much more prosperous and [illegible] than [illegible] foreign lands. It is astonishing and almost humiliating that measures similar to those enumerated above were passed years ago in England and in Germany [illegible] [illegible] their industrial workers attention to their well-being and comfort, solicitude for their health and vigor. While England and Germany have thus been legislating to make the conditions of their industrial army more bearable, to give them greater happiness and fairer treatment, the Republican party in control of our Government has been engaged in passing tariff bills and other legislative concessions giving to the manufacturers enormous advantages which have resulted in fortunes of individuals the size of which staggers the world. Is it of less importance, I ask, that the wage-earners of the community, many if not most of whom are laboring for insufficient wages, should have the just recognition of their rights represented by these enlightened measures, than that their employers should be permitted, from legislative favors to them, to pay the enormous dividends which have been paid in recent years in the textile industries, notably in the now notorious Farr Alpaca Company.

I have yet to hear in this campaign the right or justice of any one of these bills challenged, and yet, although demanded for years, they were never passed until they were [illegible] Governor Foss [illegible] [illegible] upon which the structure of popular government is built." They represent the higher standard of progressive thought and an enlightened recognition of the duty of humanity to those who are weaker and more impeded in their struggle for existence. The Workingmen's Compensation Law [illegible] adequate [illegible] step for the relief of [illegible] Now [illegible] the last Legislature [illegible] weaker [illegible] nate of the community. These bills were also enacted following upon the Governor's recommendation:

Investigation of stock-selling holding companies.

Supervision of loan business to protect [illegible].

Compensation for [illegible] persons confined before trial.

Efficient and humane administration of public institutions.

Plan for part-time schooling for working children.

The [illegible] by which the wages of the working classes [illegible] taken from them by the sale of fake securities and by the greed of loan sharks [illegible] acted into law [illegible] fair name of [illegible].

Bills Affecting The Judiciary.

The bills for an increase in the number of judges and [illegible] their salaries are of scarcely less importance to the people at large, although their significance is not as generally recognized. No better statement can be made of the situation which one of these bills relieved than in the words of Governor Foss's Inaugural:

> I think we are all agreed that the first duty of a free government is to ensure the prompt enforcement of legal rights as between man and man. There is no excuse for a delay of years before a plaintiff can finally establish his rights or a defendant be finally relieved of the trouble and uncertainty of a law suit.

"The abuse which follows Governor Foss is not dissimilar to that which characterizes the attacks upon Lloyd George. I venture to say that no Tory whose power, in the interest of the people, David Lloyd George has destroyed, would invite him to his house or even consider him respectable. The personal abuse and virulence to which that man has been subjected is almost unparalleled; and yet his name will go down into history as one of the greatest statesmen England has ever produced."

"The abuse of Lincoln, of Garrison and of Wendell Phillips, when they attacked the vested privilege of slavery, was not dissimilar. It is to the shame of our city that these high minded reformers were attacked in our streets and vilified in the public press. Thus bitter is the feeling of those who for years have enjoyed authority, when their right to rule is criticized and their domination challenged."

DEMOCRATIC CHAIRMEN DECLARE FOSS IS CERTAIN TO WIN

Leaders of Party All Over State Say Frothingham Is Beaten.

Commonwealth a vista of progress which hitherto has been closed by the inefficiency and incapacity of previous Legislatures. When these propositions were laid before the Governor and Legislature for their consideration the response was prompt. There was no breath of scandal connected with them, although millions were involved. The legislators were influenced simply of the justice of the cause and the honest purpose of the petitioners.

The measures advocated by Governor Foss for the restoration of the control of the government to the people are among the most interesting and important of all the measures which he has inspired. Representative government in recent years has been almost a failure. The great moneyed interests have found little difficulty in approaching the people's representatives and inducing them by various devices, creditable or otherwise, to support the various schemes by which they have conspired to [illegible]

[illegible] The direct [illegible] ever, [illegible] to restore the minds of the people to [illegible] control of the government. The initiative and referendum urged [illegible] barely missing enactment by the Legislature against the protest of the Republican majority, when enacted will restore fully the control of the government to the [illegible] make practically impossible a repetition of the disgraceful record of the past of corruption of the people's representatives.

The sole criticism I have heard at the hands of Republican orators of this wonderful record of legislation is to disparage Governor Foss's claim for credit. In this they have viciously and unjustly wronged Governor Foss. Neither he nor his friends have ever claimed sole credit for this progressive legislation. Both he and his friends have asserted that quite as much credit was due to the Democrats of the Legislature and their "allies." I assert that the Democratic members of the last Legislature and the Insurgent Republicans performed a service which is a lasting honor and benefit to the Commonwealth. These bills in the interest of the people, and of the people alone, were enacted by their votes, and the just claim of Governor Foss is that they were put through as a result of his recommendations and the support of his powerful personal influence. His credit and honor are not dimmed, but rather increased by the fact that those who so ably and loyally worked with him are also entitled to the same credit.

As has been well said in the editorial columns of a leading newspaper: "If these laws were passed by the [illegible] and support regardless of party lines."

In view of this almost marvellous record of legislation and achievement I cannot believe that the people will fail to elect not only Governor Foss, but every associate on the Democratic ticket, nor can I believe that they will [illegible] to put into the Governor's [illegible] effective power of a sympathetic Legislature to carry out further similar measures for the promotion of the highest interests of the people as a whole.

Judicial Appointments.

Governor Foss's claim to re-election does not rest solely upon the legislative measures which he has advocated and in the [illegible] of which he has exerted so strong an influence. His appointments, judicial and otherwise, are an important factor in his record before the people.

It has fallen to the lot of Governor Foss to appoint a Chief Justice and an Associate Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court and nine Justices of the Superior Court. Every appointment was made after the most serious care, with a single view to giving to the Commonwealth the services of absolutely the best man available for the position. Care has been taken that these appointees should represent the interests of the people, should be in touch with the humane progressive spirit that seeks to uplift the community as a whole, that they should be without alliance or sympathy with those who have fattened upon the abuses of a Republican administration. Each appointment, as made, has not only received the universal commendation of citizens, but has seemed almost to extort, as it were, the [illegible] of journals bitterly hostile to Governor Foss. I venture to say that in a generation there exists no [illegible] record of judicial appointments.

Campaign of Bitter Abuse And Cheap Vilification.

I have been led to wondering during the progress of the campaign at the personal bitterness and cheap vilification to which Governor Foss has been subjected. Nothing that he has achieved, as shown by the remarkable record which I have reviewed, has had the slightest word of commendation from Republican lips. They have criticised and vilified [illegible] The abuse of [illegible] and of Wendell Phillips, when they attacked the vested privilege of slavery was not dissimilar. It is to the shame of our city that these high minded reformers were attacked in our streets and vilified in the public press. [illegible] is the feeling of those who for years have enjoyed authority, when their right to rule is criticised and their domination challenged.

I cannot believe that this bitter and cheap abuse can seriously affect Governor Foss in the minds of the people for whom he has stood as champion and fought with superb courage.

National Issues.

In their discussion of national issues the Republican orators have not been convincing. The ancient bogey of injury to New England industries by a reform of the tariff has been called into service. Apparently, however, it has lost its terrors. It had an effect when the Republicans stood solidly for a tariff no matter how high. To-day, however, the more intelligent members of the party admit that the Payne-Aldrich tariff is indefensible and that its schedules should be revised downward.

The position of Governor Foss as to the tariff differs but slightly, if at all, from that declared by President Taft. Both are earnest advocates of reciprocity as a method of abolishing tariff on food products. Both the President and the Governor have declared that the woolen schedule is indefensible and the cotton schedule too high. The President vetoed the Democratic bills for the reduction of these schedules, not because the schedules should not be reduced, but because in his opinion we should await the report of his Tariff Board. In this, Governor Foss differs from the President. It is his declared position that relief from the present prevailing high prices should be immediate; that the food [illegible] the workingman eats should be put upon the free list, and that the clothing he wears should be untaxed.

High Cost of Living.

Republican orators have constantly represented that the price of necessities of life is higher than a year ago. They make this admission the premise of a [illegible] that Governor Foss has not kept his promises, because a year ago he promised to reduce the price of necessities and has not done so. This assertion is not only false, but stupidly false. Governor Foss did not last year assert that he could or would reduce the cost of living. He maintained that his election would be a declaration that the people of the Commonwealth declared against the excessive cost of living, just as the Republicans claim to-day that his defeat will mean that the people are opposed to a reduction of the tariff. Governor Foss and his supporters insisted in [illegible] that his election would encourage the National Congress to reduce the cost of living either by a reduction of the tariff or by reciprocity. In point of fact, his election contributed to just this result. A reciprocity bill was recommended by the President and enacted by Congress; whereupon the price of provisions immediately [illegible] the enactment of [illegible] for reduction of the tariff, but this relief was [illegible] the vetoes of President [illegible] of the [illegible]

ANDERSON'S ELECTION URGED BY LOUIS D. BRANDEIS

George W. Anderson, Democratic candidate for Attorney-General, is urged for election by Louis D. Brandeis as a natural protector of the people's rights. Mr. Brandeis says:

At a time when our great social and industrial need is progressive, constructive legislation, the Governor of the Commonwealth requires the assistance of such a legal advisor. George W. Anderson combines in a rare degree the qualities which an Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts should possess. He is an able lawyer of wide experience gained throughout many years of general practice. He is broad-minded, coupling a due appreciation of the rights of capital with deep human sympathy, which would prevent his forgetting that property was made for man—not man for property. Both in and out of office he has given proof of fine public spirit. He is progressive, and has that moral indignation against wrongs done to the people which should make him a natural protector of their rights.

Prosecutions Of the Trusts.

The President's [illegible] trust prosecutions, calculated apparently to assist Mr. Frothingham, has injured his candidacy. These prosecutions have disturbed business confidence and angered [illegible]. They have especially irritated the class from which Mr. Frothingham draws his support. The cry that a vote for Frothingham is a vote in support of the President [illegible] helpful.

I do not mean that the President can be criticised for his attempt to enforce the law; but neither he nor his party can escape the just criticism that the legislation or lack of legislation for which [illegible] side is largely, if not wholly responsible for the situation which he is trying to abate by these trust prosecutions.

Furthermore, the people now seem to realize better than ever before the real nature and the object of the tariff as well as its results. They see now that the trusts and monopolies which have grown up have resulted from superfluous and excessive tariff; that the combinations have been made so that the beneficiaries of the tariff might enjoy their benefits to the full. The people generally understand pretty [illegible] and leaders is the last [illegible] them to do it. The people now seem to understand that the way to destroy [illegible] has [illegible] them.

Corporate Support of Mr. Frothingham's Candidacy.

This campaign has exhibited an open and earnest support of Mr. Frothingham and a bitter antagonism to [illegible] tions, beneficiaries of the tariff. This open support has seriously injured Mr. Frothingham [illegible] of Governor Foss and Mr. Anderson that these matters should be investigated has aroused popular attention. These developments have served to swell the tide which has been running for at least the last fortnight in favor of the Democrats.

Every recent day of the campaign has strengthened the cause of Democracy. The tide is running swiftly in favor of the election of Governor Foss, and all signs point to the certain election of [illegible] control of the Legislature. It may be that we underrate the power of those forces which have been silently operated by Senator Crane and Senator Lodge, but so far as anything appears in this [illegible] the victory of the Democrats next Tuesday will be overwhelming.

If Governor Foss is defeated it will be a serious and unmerited blow to the cause of government by the people and in the interest of the people. A victory of Mr. Frothingham would be a victory of the money power, of the trusts, of the Republican machine, of the "stand-patters." It would be a victory of the principle of special legislative privilege to the few and a defeat of the right of equal privilege and equal opportunity for all.

FOSS IS SURE TO WIN, SAY PARTY CHAIRMEN

Chairmen of Democratic City and Town Committees in Massachusetts are confident of the re-election of Governor Foss Tuesday.

In special statements to the Sunday AMERICAN, chairmen from the State over, declare that in their particular localities Governor Foss will not only equal his vote of a year ago, but surpass it. Last year Governor Foss won by a plurality of rising 35,000.

The statements of the committee chairmen are valuable as showing the exact situation in cities and towns of the State, and from men on the ground, whose duty it is to ascertain true conditions.

They have, and their statements convey a reassurance similar to that expressed by Boston leaders to the Sunday AMERICAN two weeks ago, that Governor Foss will be as strong in their [illegible] hood, next Tuesday, as he was a year ago when he swept the Republican machine from State House control.

The tariff, as the chairmen all agree, is not being so seriously considered by the voters as orators on the stump of both parties believe.

The admirable record of Governor Foss during his one year as Governor, the [illegible] of Insurgent Republicans, which [illegible] not yet turned, and the determination of the people to rebuke the Republican party for its subservience to Lodgeism, are given as some of the reasons by the chairman for a continued drift of Republicans to Foss.

Veto Wins Votes for Foss.

In the Western counties of the State and in the farming towns of Middlesex, Essex and Worcester, the [illegible] of the Ellis Milk Bill has won the votes of farmers in blocks. In the textile cities the chairmen report that the toilers in mill and workshop are not at all frightened by the "bogey man" of Republican orators that the election of Foss means lower wages or a closing of the mills.

The statements of the chairmen cover the whole State. They are especially representative because of the different cities covered and the expression of sentiment from towns remote, as well as near to populous cities. Expressions of opinion by town and city committee officials follow:

BROCKTON, Thomas B. Hickey, Chairman:
Governor Foss will receive a [illegible] tial increase in Brockton over his vote of a year ago. His administration [illegible] Republican [illegible].

WORCESTER, Charles F. Campbell, Chairman:
Foss will be re-elected with increased plurality over last year especially in Worcester. Never in the history of Worcester and the State has the Democratic party been so united on a candidate.

LAWRENCE, William J. Meade, Chairman:
Lawrence came within a few votes of giving Foss 3,000 plurality and this year it will do better. The Republican shouters haven't fooled the mill workers. The bogeyman calamity howl of Frothingham and Luce has disgusted workers who think. Neither Frothingham nor Luce has done anything for the mill workers.

WALTHAM, Thomas F. Kearns, Chairman:
Governor Foss will receive a vote equal to the one he received in 1910—2,100. I am convinced after visiting several cities and towns in Middlesex County and from reports I have from other places that the discussion of the tariff will in no way militate against Foss.

PITTSFIELD, James W. Synan, Chairman:
Governor Foss will carry Pittsfield by 200 majority. He lost last year by fourteen votes, but he will receive the vote of a considerable number of the farmers. I look to see him carry Berkshire County by at least 200 votes.

MARLBORO, John H. Parker, Chairman:
I [illegible] Foss will [illegible] vote by at least 200. The vote in 1910 in Marlboro was, Foss 1,510, Draper 1,224. The tariff does not scare Marlboro workingmen.

WOBURN, J. J. Costello, Secretary:
Governor Foss will surpass his 1910 majority in Woburn. The tariff issues are recognized as Lodge standpatism and will operate in favor of Governor Foss.

FITCHBURG, John H. Quigley, Chairman:
Governor Foss is going to get a larger vote here than he did last year when he surprised Republicans here. The Democrats of Fitchburg stand united for Foss.

GLOUCESTER, Herman Brown, Chairman:
Governor Foss will be re-elected. Last year he polled within 300 votes of Draper in Gloucester, that is normally strongly Republican. This year he will get the votes of more Republicans than last year.

NEW BEDFORD, Manuel A. Williams, Chairman:
I predict that Governor Foss will secure a sweeping victory in New Bedford, surpassing his vote of last year, which gave Foss a majority of 1159 over Draper. His candidacy is gaining strength.

LOWELL, Cornelius F. Cronin, Chairman:
I [illegible] to say that a greater Foss vote will be polled in Lowell than last year, when Foss had exactly twice as many votes as Draper in Lowell. He will get a big French vote.

SALEM, James J. Walsh, chairman:
Governor Foss will surely carry this town by a larger majority than he received last year, which was over 650 votes. The tariff issue will not affect his vote in the least.

PEABODY, Daniel J. O'Connor, Chairman:
Governor Foss will carry this town by at least 500 votes. He hasn't lost any voters since last year, when he had a plurality of 518 votes. I don't think the tariff issue will affect his vote.

LYNN, Michael H. Cotter, Chairman:
I believe the prospects of Governor Foss re-election are brighter than they were last year. The able manner in which he has conducted the affairs of the State will win him many new votes.

SWAMPSCOTT, James T. Lyons, Chairman:
I think [illegible] Foss has good prospects of being re-elected. I think the voters will cast their ballots the same as last year.

SAUGUS, Patrick Flaherty, Chairman:
The vote of Foss will be largely increased in Saugus it will be eight to ten per cent greater than last year. The tariff issue will have no effect.

NEWTON, Daniel O'Connell, Chairman:
Governor Foss will be re-elected. His vote in Newton will be slightly larger than last year. His record has been such as to enthuse the Democrats.

NORTHAMPTON, Timothy J. Collins, Chairman:
I have not the slightest hesitation in predicting a majority of double the size of last year for Foss. I believe that Foss will carry the county.

NORTH ADAMS, John H. Flaherty, Chairman:
Governor Foss will carry North Adams by a larger majority than last year. His appointments to the bench will win him many votes in Northern Berkshire.

ADAMS, F. A. Wiethaupter, Chairman:
Governor Foss will carry the town by a larger majority than last year. His veto of the Ellis milk bill has helped him greatly with the farmers.

LEE, James O'Brien, Chairman:
Governor Foss will carry the town. Last year Foss lost the town by five votes. His judicial appointments will win Republican votes.

LENOX, James Flynn, Chairman:
Governor Foss will hold his own in Lenox despite the fact that a cousin of Frothingham is a resident of the town. Foss has more than held his own on new registration.

MILFORD, John T. McLaughlin, Chairman:
[illegible] Foss is sure of re-election. I expect Foss to win by an increased majority. The Governor's record is a good one.

WAREHAM, Edward A. Gammons, Chairman:
Foss will be re-elected, and this town will go for him. The tariff issues will figure but little in the vote.

WEBSTER, Lawrence Dugan, Chairman:
Prospects for Foss's re-election were never brighter. The vote that will be cast for Webster will by far surpass that of last year.

GREAT BARRINGTON, Harvey F. Shufelt, Chairman:
Governor Foss will win. He has been here twice and made a fine impression. I have heard a large number of Republican farmers say they will vote for him.

SHEFFIELD, William O'Connell, Chairman:
Although this town has given the Republican candidate for Governor [illegible] in former years I am of the opinion that Foss will receive the largest vote here this year.

STOCKBRIDGE, William Healey, Chairman:
I predict that Foss will at least break even with Frothingham in this town which is strongly Republican. The Governor's record is known to the Stockbridge voters.

NORTH ATTLEBORO, Dr. M. E. Vance, Chairman:
I think Foss's prospects for re-election are extremely bright. It is my belief that he will surpass his vote of a year ago in this town.

ATTLEBORO, William J. Kenney, Chairman:
I think Foss will be elected by a larger majority than last year.

SOUTHBRIDGE, Alexander J. Boyer, Jr., Chairman:
Never before in the history of Southbridge were prospects for a Foss and a Democratic landslide so bright. I predict [illegible] his vote [illegible] last year.

Men Who Know Sentiment Find the Voters Have Not Been Frightened

PLYMOUTH, Thomas Regan, Chairman:
I feel safe in saying that Foss will hold his vote of last year. His plurality over Draper in a Republican town is a great testimonial to his qualities.

NEEDHAM, Charles M. Donahoe, Chairman:
Foss will exceed his vote of last year. He will be re-elected. Frothingham will about hold Draper's vote.

SWANSEA, George G. Young, Chairman:
I think the vote for Foss in this town will exceed that of 1910. The tariff is [illegible]

LEOMINSTER, George E. Sanderson, Chairman:
Foss [illegible] unexpected strength in Leominster [illegible] year [illegible] make a far better showing. It is certain he will hold his own here.

ERVING, A. H. Parker, Chairman:
[illegible] to the Governor.

IPSWICH, P. P. Kierce, Chairman:
The prospects are bright for the re-election of Foss. He will probably carry [illegible]

MIDDLEBORO, Edgar D. Wood, Chairman:
I [illegible] Foss will be re-elected. His administration has been a good one [illegible] Democratic party [illegible] was never so united.

NATICK, Thomas H. Brennan, Chairman:
This year the Governor's majority over Frothingham will be larger than last year, because of Frothingham's known affiliation with the [illegible]

LABOR LEADERS UNITE IN SUPPORT OF FOSS

Governor Foss will go to the polls on Tuesday with the strongest labor indorsement given to a candidate for Governor since trade unionism became a factor in the political life of the community.

Prominent among the principal labor leaders who have advocated the re-election of Governor Foss are these officials:

MARTIN T. JOYCE, secretary-treasurer of the Massachusetts State Branch of the American Federation of Labor.

CAV. DOMINICK D'ALLESSANDRO, general president of the International Building Laborers' Union.

WILLIAM H. O'BRIEN, former president of the Boston Central Labor Union.

Never before in the history of trade unionism has a candidate been given such strong indorsement. The exception made in favor of Governor Foss is due solely to his magnificent record of accomplishment.

Labor in Massachusetts this year has departed from its former negative policy of merely condemning candidates, the method pursued in securing the defeat of ex-Governor Draper.

Directly Urge Foss Votes.

Instead of urging those affiliated with powerful trade unions not to vote for Frothingham, because of his known hostility to labor legislation in the past, the leaders of the movement are urging the rank and file to vote for Foss because of what he already has done and because of what he promises to do further.

James W. Wall of Worcester, president of the Massachusetts State Branch of the American Federation of Labor, in his statement published exclusively in the Sunday AMERICAN one week ago, declared that he would vote for Foss.

John J. Fenton and John J. Kearney of this city, vice-presidents of the Federation, and Martin T. Joyce of Roxbury, secretary-treasurer, asserted in ringing articles furnished the Sunday AMERICAN at that time that they, too, were for Foss, first, last and all the time.

John Golden of Fall River, international president of the United Textile Workers, also stated that he was out for the triumphant re-election of Foss because of his approval of the 54-hour law for women and children.

Stands for Labor's Desires.

William H. O'Brien, former president of the Boston Central Labor Union, in a statement contrasted the platforms of the Democratic and the Republican parties. He conclusively proved that Foss stood for almost everything the trade unionists desired in the way of labor legislation while Frothingham's platform declarations were absolutely meaningless.

John F. Tobin, general president of the Boot and Shoe Workers' Union, whose alleged letter to Senator Lodge had been so contorted by the Republicans that it seemed to favor of Frothingham, further made it clear that he had never so much as intimated that he was going to vote for even one Republican candidate.

And, if any further endorsement of Foss were needed it was given in the statement issued by Cav. Dominick D'Allesandro, general president of the Building Laborers' Union, and knighted by the King of Italy for his fight against padronism in this country, who emphatically declared that Governor Foss had done more for labor than any other man who ever held the office.

This unqualified indorsement by the labor leaders of this State acquires added significance because Governor Foss is one of the largest employers of labor in Massachusetts. It effectually disposes of the claim advanced by his opponents that he has been unfair to organized labor.

Labor Laws He Has Signed.

In every instance cited the labor leaders have confined themselves to statements of fact, their commendation of Governor Foss resting on his accomplishments rather than on any indefinite promises. They claim that he has been the best Governor for labor that ever filled the office in this State. In support of that contention they point to his approval of seventeen measures previously advocated by the Federation of Labor, since elected one year ago. Ten of these measures are distinctly labor laws. This is the list:

Direct nomination of State officers.
Limitation of campaign expenses.
Workingmen's compensation law for injured employes.
Anti-injunction bill, giving right of trial by jury.
Fifty-four hours a week for women and children.
Plan for "part-time" schooling for working children.
Eight-hour day for public employes.
Pensions for State employes and city laborers in Boston.
Investigation of minimum wage legislation.
Plan to improve the prison industries.
Investigation of sale of prison-made goods in open market.
Plan to assist workmen to secure suburban homesteads.
Investigation of stock-selling holding companies.
Supervision of loan business to protect small borrowers.
Compensation for suspected person confined before trial.
Efficient and humane administration of public institutions.
Abolishment of solitary confinement in reformatories.

Frothingham's studied effort to make it appear that Foss was not acceptable to the labor men of the State, coupled with the well known fact that Frothingham himself is conceded to have voted against every labor law that came before the House while he was in the Legislature, [illegible] is thus shown to put him in a ridiculous light so far as the trades union voters are concerned.

Men to Textile Workers' Support.

The absurd claim that Frothingham will carry the big textile cities is best answered by John Golden, president of the United Textile Workers of America, in the following statement:

Governor Foss, without question, is one of the very best Governors Massachusetts ever had. I shall vote for him unhesitatingly, and shall do everything that lies in my power to secure his re-election.

[illegible] has made a wonderful advance in progressive labor legislation [illegible] months. We want to make a still further advance [illegible] Governor Foss has proved, not by promises alone, but by action, that he is the one man above all others who as Governor of the State will help us to secure it.

[illegible] the man's past party affiliations may have been, of any consequence to trade unionist so lacking in gratitude or so blind to the future welfare of the wage workers [illegible] vote for [illegible] front when signing so many labor [illegible] their 54-hour [illegible] Foss merits their [illegible] the polls. And I am satisfied that he will get it. Of course there will be a few who are sure to be in the "not-made-good" class [illegible] will be so small that these men will not constitute even a respectable sized majority.

The [illegible] fact that Governor Foss is the man of the hour is clearly demonstrated by his splendid public record, as well as by the equally sole [illegible] platform he stands on. The [illegible] fact that Frothingham's [illegible] record unfits him to [illegible] the position to which he aspires [illegible] demonstrated while the platform he stands on is built up of a lot of meaningless phrases.

Workingmen voters are not blind. They are keenly alive to the situation. Frothingham, therefore, is a political impossibility. The re-election of Governor Foss is a foregone conclusion.

"FOSS BY 50,000," IS PREDICTION OF JOHN F. M'DONALD

Governor Foss will be re-elected by a margin of 50,000 and Boston will give the Governor the best vote any candidate ever received at our hands is the prediction of Chairman John F. McDonald of the Democratic State Committee.

Chairman McDonald believes also that the Democrats will win five new seats in the State Senate, besides retaining what they have now. He says:

We have been in intimate touch with every city and town in the Commonwealth, not only through City and Town Committees, but through a considerable number of otherwise actively interested men in each community. The tune is all one way that the tide has set in to Foss and Walsh and that the only conjecture now concerning the political observers is how many others on the State ticket will get under the wire and how good are the chances for the local Legislative candidates.

I feel that several candidates on our State ticket will be swept into office if, indeed, the whole ticket does not win.

On the Legislative returns I stake my reputation as a political observer, and [illegible] that we will increase our membership in both branches, which means that with the independent Republicans we will control the Legislature this year, so that desired amendments may be made to perfect the legislation we forced through last year, and that new gains in progressive legislation may be made.

We will win at least one new Senatorial seat in Bristol, one in Worcester, one in Middlesex and two in Essex, and we will hold what we have.

A gerrymandered State will be overcome by the margin rising 50,000 by which Governor Foss will win.

Boston will give the Governor the best vote any candidate ever received at her hands.

PROMINENT PHYSICIAN PLEADS GUILTY

Says Rum and Morphine Caused His Downfall

Very weak and emaciated this Doctor told a pitiful story, saying that through the carelessness of another physician he became addicted to the use of morphine some years ago, and the habit had grown so rapidly that according to the Doctor's own statements he had been taking enormous quantities of morphia, some cocaine and more than a quart of whiskey every twenty-four hours.

He said: "I am guilty of shortening my own life at least twenty years by the use of these stimulants, and no human being realizes how I have suffered both mentally and physically trying to overcome these habits.

"I have taken a number of treatments for the above habits and always have suffered the most excruciating agony and pains, and always found that they left me in such poor physical condition that it has been an absolute impossibility for me to continue my professional duties without the drugs.

"I have been through the Neal Treatment at 304 Newbury Street, Boston, and it has certainly been a new experience for me. In view of the extreme suffering I experienced during my former treatments, I was skeptical when I went to the Neal Institute, but a few days soon convinced me that the Neal Treatment is certainly all that they claim for it.

"I did not experience any suffering or pain while under the treatment, and am absolutely free from any desire or craving for drugs or liquor of any kind, and can cheerfully recommend the Neal Treatment from the standpoint of a physician who has had much experience with alcoholic and drug cases, for any who are addicted, because it is painless and sure."

The original letter containing the above statements and signed by this physician is on file and open for inspection at the Neal Institute office. This man, like many others, was thoroughly poisoned with alcohol and drugs, as he had been taking great quantities of each for several years. This poison in the system causes what is generally called "craving" or "desire for stimulants." The Neal Treatment acts as an antidote to this poison, eliminating it from the system, and thus destroying the appetite.

While taking the Neal Treatment the patients are not denied their usual drink or drug when they desire it, but after a few doses of the Neal Treatment have been administered, they do not desire it. They are never placed under restraint.

Compare the Neal Three-Day Treatment with the old gradual reduction method, with their long drawn-out pain and suffering and frequent relapses (the latter due to the extreme weakness following such long periods of suffering), and you will realize why the Neal Treatment is so successful.

We would be pleased to take up the matter of treatment with all those who are interested. Call or write for our free booklet and literature. Kindly state whether your case is liquor or drugs. Address the Neal Institute, 304 Newbury St., Boston. Telephone Back Bay 3970. The Portland, Maine, Neal Institute is located at 65 Pleasant Ave.; telephone 4216.

Stops a Deep-Seated Cough in a Hurry

A Family Supply of Unequaled Cough Remedy for 50c—Money Refunded if It Fails.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large proportion of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one that anyone can make. A pint of granulated sugar, with ½ pint of warm water, stirred for two minutes, gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, mixed in a pint bottle with home made sugar syrup, gives you a full pint of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready mixed for $2.50. There's a clear saving of $2.00. Full directions in package.

And money couldn't buy a quicker, better remedy. Takes hold at once, gives almost instant relief, and usually stops the most obstinate, deep-seated cough in 24 hours. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative and has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. Splendid for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains and other throat troubles, and unequaled for prompt results in whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of imported Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix it as directed with sugar syrup or strained honey and it is ready for use.

Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Fort Wayne, Ind.

I Am Willing to Prove I Can Cure You

To That End I Am Giving Away $10,000 Worth of Medicine

In order to show beyond all doubt that I am in possession of a medicine that will cure kidney trouble, bladder trouble or rheumatism, I will this year give away ten thousand dollars' worth of this medicine, and anyone suffering from these diseases can get a box of it absolutely free. All that is necessary is to send me your address.

I don't mean that you are to use a part of it or all of it and pay me if cured. I mean that I will send you a box of this medicine absolutely free of charge, a gift from me to the true A[illegible] sufferers of the world, so I can show them where and how they may be cured. I will not expect payment for this free medicine, nor would I accept it now or later if you sent it. It is free in the real meaning of the word.

For twenty-five years—a quarter of a century—I have been trying to convince the public that I have something genuine, something better than others have for the cure of stubborn chronic rheumatism, for torturing kidney backache, for annoying calls to urinate. But it is hard to convince people; they try a few times unsuccessfully, and give up all hope and refuse to listen to any one thereafter. Happily, I am in a position now to demonstrate to sufferers at my own expense that I have a medicine that cures these diseases. I don't ask them to spend any money to find out; I don't ask them to believe me, nor even to take the word of reliable people, but all I ask is that they allow me to send them the medicine at my own cost. That is surely fair.

To this end I have set aside ten thousand dollars, which will be used to compound my medicine. Much of it is ready now to be sent out, all of it fresh and standard. There will be enough for all sufferers, though there be thousands of them. And anyone who needs it can get some of it free. But [illegible] for much has need me is [illegible]. I ask you to send me some of your leading symptoms. If you have any of the symptoms in the list printed here [illegible] my medicine and if you will write me I will gladly send you a box of it free with full directions for your use. Look the symptoms over, see which symptoms you have, then write me about as follows: "Dear Dr.: I notice symptoms number —here put down the numbers, give your age, full address, and send it to me. My address is Dr. T. Frank Lynott, 4776 Occidental Building, Chicago, Ill.

[illegible] thousand dollars I am spending for the compounding of my medicine is only a part of the money I am devoting to this cause, for the package of medicine I send you will be fully prepaid [illegible] From any standpoint you view it, YOU incur no expense [illegible] others who you know to suffer [illegible] the medicine that cured you.

I am promising to give away ten thousand dollars' worth of medicine, and I will do that. I am promising to send any sufferer who writes me a [illegible] of this medicine and full directions free of charge, and I will do that. I can say further that this medicine has been vouched for according to law as complying in every detail with all requirements. It will stop rheumatism; it will stop pain and backache; it will stop too frequent desire to urinate; it will heal, soothe and strengthen. You will be better in every way for having taken it. There is not an ingredient that can injure; not one but will benefit. All that I ask is that you use it yourself so that you may be personally convinced.

Owing to the large number of requests, I have had ten thousand [illegible] copies of my medical book printed. This book is new and up to date and contains complete descriptions, symptoms, causes, effects and cures of kidney, bladder and rheumatic diseases. All who write for the free medicine will be sent a copy of this grand illustrated medical book—the largest ever written on these diseases for free and general distribution.

If you need medicine such as I have, if you are a [illegible] and don't want to spend any money LOOKING for cures, write me. Read the symptoms over and let me hear from you today.

GEORGE W ANDERSON
CHRISTIANSEN PHOTO

For Attorney-General,
GEORGE W. ANDERSON.

"For weeks the newspapers of this Commonwealth have fairly reeked with advertisements of the United Shoe Machinery Company and of the American Woolen Company, advocating, both directly and indirectly, the defeat of Governor Foss and the rest of us Democratic candidates, and the election of Mr. Frothingham and the other Republican candidates. Nothing can be clearer than that this advertising is intended to "promote" the election of Republicans and "prevent" the election of Governor Foss. It is, therefore, a criminal violation of our Corrupt Practices Act."

AUGUSTUS L THORNDIKE

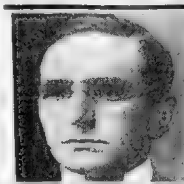
For State Treasurer,
AUGUSTUS L. THORNDIKE.

"When the Liberal Chancellor Lloyd George brought in his budget two years ago the House of Lords insolently voted to throw it out. The Liberals appealed to the people. The Lords made all kinds of dire threats. The empire would collapse. The sun would cease to shine. The mob would take possession of the government. The King would be dethroned. Fire and ruin would visit the fine land of England. Have these things come to pass? England is as peaceful as a Summer day."



FRANK J. DONAHUE

For Secretary of State,
FRANK J. DONAHUE.

"Will Mr. Luce, or somebody else speaking for the Republican party, please state its attitude on the direct election of United States Senators? Will the Republican party, failing to pledge itself in its platform, pledge itself now, through its candidates on the stump, to favor legislation which will allow the people of this Commonwealth to decide upon a successor to Senator W. Murray Crane in the Congress of the United States?"

DAVID I WALSH

For Lieutenant-Governor,
DAVID I. WALSH.

"One of our first demands is the popular election of United States Senators. The call for this change is due to the fact that the majority of the people are convinced that the larger number of our Senators are now elected, directly or indirectly, through the influence of great trusts and privileged wealth. Our opponents have failed to make a declaration on this subject. Mr Frothingham and Mr Luce are both on record as voting against the direct election of United States Senators."

CHARLES STRECKER

For State Auditor,
CHARLES B. STRECKER.

"Mr. Frothingham has consistently voted against those things which tend to the betterment and uplifting of every man, woman and child in this Commonwealth, always voting with the few against the many. Against this record is that of His Excellency the Governor. He stands for and has advocated and signed such measures as are absolutely the opposite of those voted against by Mr Frothingham."

Chairman of the State Committee,
JOHN F. M'DONALD.

"The intelligent citizen of Massachusetts will have little difficulty in picking his candidate for Governor this year. A hasty review of what Governor Foss has accomplished will ordinarily satisfy the voter, but I want him to study the record of the Governor's rival. I have absolutely no hesitancy in declaring my confidence that the Governor's plurality will be greater than his plurality last year. Give Governor Foss a Council, a Senate and a House in sympathy with this movement of the people."

WHAT REPUBLICANS SAY AS TO OUTCOME AT POLLS TUESDAY

Outside of President Herman Hormel of the Republican City Committee, who places the Foss plurality in Boston at not more than 10,000—President Joseph A. Maynard of the Democratic City Committee says the Governor will go out of Boston not less than 40,000 to the good—not a Boston Republican of note would risk a guess [illegible] at the Foss-Frothingham figures of Tuesday.

United States Senator Henry Cabot Lodge.

"I have nothing to say. I am not talking."

Congressman Butler Ames.

"I am no sort of prophet, and don't care to hazard a guess on majorities. Political questions are so uncertain that I hesitate to make any predictions, though it looks like a normal Republican vote in the Lowell district. If this is true, and the same thing holds good throughout the State, it seems to me that Frothingham should be elected by the majority usually given a Republican candidate for Governor in Massachusetts. But even this is a matter of conjecture. It is impossible for any man to say how the election will go until the votes are counted."

Former Speaker of the House John N. Cole:

"Frothingham will poll the normal Republican vote, less a certain strength that Foss has gained in the distinctly farming districts. Aside from Foss's strength among the farmers, there has been a general shift from him to Froth-

Going down Hull and Nantasket shore to-day, from Pemberton clear to Green Hill, it will be nothing but one fish dinner after another.

It's all free fish, too, wreckage from the schooner Susan and Mary, which is breaking up fast on Point Allerton bar.

Captain Nickerson of the schooner announced yesterday that the South Shore public was welcome to the 60,000 pounds of cod, hake and halibut loaded in the schooner's hold. He mentioned 4 o'clock at low tide, as a handy time to go on this free fishing trip. Hull and Nantasket answered. "We got cher, Cap'n," and was on hand at 4 o'clock, with every kind of a fish-carrying vessel, from two hands to a horse and cart.

Some gatherers went at the fish methodically. They backed up a wagon to the wreck and loaded up to the top of the tailboard. Then they drove home with the easiest catch of their lives.

Others came merely to pick out a fine cod or two for today's dinner. Everybody got what they wanted, and all it cost was the time and car fare.

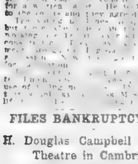
CANCER and TUMOR



Cured by Absorption—No Cutting, No Pain

When I say I cure Cancers and Tumors, I speak to the most incredulous—those who are suffering, getting no help, no hopeful encouragement from family physicians.

IN MY TWENTY YEARS OF SUCCESS I have demonstrated that Cancers and Tumors are not local sores, but are the accumulation of poison that circulates in the blood throughout the entire system. I treat the cause, and by curing it eliminate the effect. When the blood is purified the symptoms will disappear. Surgery only treats the sore or local symptoms and the poison will again accumulate at or near the same place as before. I will supply testimonials from hundreds of my patients, some of whom were cured many years ago—cured to stay cured.

When the firemen arrived they learned from the evidence that the fire was the work of an incendiary. A [illegible] Nearly [illegible] were [illegible]

Rivals Linnell Case in Interest.

Following so closely upon the Linnell murder in Boston, for which Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson is awaiting trial on the charge of [illegible] the death of Mrs. McFarland from a similar cause has aroused an unusual amount of talk.

When the news first reached this city of Mrs. McFarland's death, it was reported as a case of suicide. The authorities in Newark working on the case, however, obtained several clews which they believed warranted an investigation. Mr. McFarland, questioned by the authorities, denied that he had poisoned his wife.

Mrs. McFarland was [illegible] her husband to be addicted to headaches, and for these she kept a bottle of bromide in the house. On Tuesday night, October 17, according to the husband, she had a severe headache. Mr. McFarland had gone to New York, taking his seven-year-old son Robert with him. On his return home Wednesday morning he found the dead body of his wife lying across the bed in her night clothes.

Instead of summoning Dr. Crowley, his next door neighbor, he walked several blocks and called Dr. William A. Gale.

He did not appear excited in the least," said Dr. Gale. "When I had made a hasty examination I asked him if there was any poison in the house and he replied, 'Yes, cyanide of potassium.' I knew that had caused her death. We went to the medicine chest and Mr. McFarland showed me the bottle of cyanide.

The poison was in a [illegible] bottle and [illegible] was written [illegible] of potassium.' I saw the label distinctly.

Change in Bottle's Label.

Later the same day Dr. William P. McKenzie, county physician, called at the house. In looking over the bottle he saw two labels, different, however, from what Dr. Gale had seen. Where the word 'bromide' had appeared was the word 'poison,' [illegible] had been pasted on the bottle after scratching out the bromide label.

Dr. Gale was positive that [illegible] label appeared on the bottle when he first saw it and he was [illegible] positive [illegible] The authorities believe that the word 'poison' was written on the bottle after Dr. Gale had left the house.

When confronted with these facts, Mr. McFarland said that the poison label had been placed there by him. As to his wife's death McFarland said:

"She must have taken the poison by mistake. I prepared some cyanide of potassium at my wife's request. She wanted it to clean silverware with.

I put the poison in a [illegible] bottle that [illegible] I took what little [illegible] was left and placed it in a small bottle in the medicine chest. I marked the bottle 'poison.' It was not necessary, as my wife knew what was in the bottle. I told her and, besides, the bottle was in

Denies Marriage Rumor

When asked if the report that his daughter was going to marry Mr. McFarland in the Essex County jail was true Mr. Bromley said [illegible] There has [illegible] arrangement [illegible] in spite of [illegible] my daughter will go there [illegible]

No date has as yet been set for the trial of Allison McFarland, but it is expected [illegible] session of court [illegible]

RICHESON TO TESTIFY IN OWN DEFENCE AT THE LINNELL TRIAL

Accused Minister to Relate Whole Story of His Acquaintance With Choir Singer

This story told on the witness stand under oath by one of the most eloquent [illegible]

The minister's own declaration, his counsel realize, is the one vital thing that stands between him and the death [illegible]

[illegible] they could [illegible]

[illegible] Hahn that Richeson bought enough cyanide of [illegible] the [illegible] stand cannot even be surmised.

Faith in Richeson

The only statement that Richeson himself has made to the public in the three weeks that have passed since it is declared he gave Avis Linnell the poison that snuffed out her life in a twinkling, is contained in his letter to his church, the Immanuel Baptist of Cambridge, in which he asserted his innocence and expressed his belief that God would lift the burden from him that he had been called upon to bear.

This letter has strengthened the belief of many of those of his congregation in [illegible]

"If Pastor Richeson murdered that girl [illegible] in the morning and evening and listened to Pastor Richeson preach. Both sermons were particularly impressive and I can see [illegible] preaching the Word of [illegible] a manner that none but an innocent [illegible] his voice and it was not the voice of a man who would say to a girl 'Take this medicine, it will do you good,' and then hand [illegible] poison."

Yet that is just what the indictment [illegible]

Seek Light in Hyannis.

Herbert O. Collins of Whitman says that he saw the couple together at the [illegible] Station at four o'clock the afternoon Avis Linnell took the poison. The defence will call members of the family of Miss Violet Edmands whom he was to marry to show that Richeson was at her home at that time in the afternoon.

[illegible] brother of the accused [illegible] who had been in Boston a week, [illegible] for his home in Chicago. Before going away he made this statement:

"I am going home absolutely assured of [illegible] of this case. I have talked with my brother [illegible] times. We have discussed the [illegible] position in which he is placed and he has convinced me of his absolute innocence of the fearful charge that stands against him.

"If I thought there was doubt as to the outcome of this case I should not go home. But there are things that will come out at the trial of my brother about which I cannot speak now that will put an entirely different light on this case as it has been presented to the public.

"My brother is innocent and he will go free."

The finance committee of Richeson's church will meet at eight o'clock to-morrow evening to consider the resignation of the pastor. This meeting will be presided over by Thomas [illegible] chairman of the committee. It is expected that the resignation of the pastor will be accepted.

It is also believed the church will issue a statement defining their attitude toward the clergyman.

Stand by Accused Man

This attitude is that the church by accepting the resignation of the pastor does not mean to indicate that it believes that Richeson is guilty, but on the contrary that the members have faith in him and will stand by him as individuals to the end. In the interest of the church, however, it is believed that an indicted man should not remain as their pastor.

The Rev. Dr. W. J. Stewart, of Woburn, preaches to-day in the Cambridge church in the place of the imprisoned pastor. The morning sermon will be on the subject, "Man's Place in the Plan of God," and in the evening his subject will be "The Division of Jacob."

LAWYER LEE, COUNSEL FOR C. V. T. RICHESON

John L. Lee

Mr. Lee, who is one of the most noted criminal lawyers in Virginia, is leading the work of the defence to establish the innocence of the accused minister when the great case comes to trial.

His Own Declaration, Counsel Believe, Stands Between Him and Conviction

RICHESON PROTESTS HE IS INNOCENT

The indictment of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson for the murder of Avis Linnell [illegible] the clergyman's resignation as pastor of the Immanuel Baptist Church of Cambridge, in which he protested that he was innocent of the base crime imputed to him were two of the developments in New England's greatest murder mystery.

The letter written by Richeson in his [illegible] Charles street jail is a concise, [illegible] and most convincing statement [illegible] the clergyman solemnly avows that he is innocent and that he is a strong [illegible] sures of his innocence.

Avowal of Innocence.

The letter was as follows:

[illegible] Charles Street Jail [illegible]

[illegible] Immanuel Baptist [illegible] street, [illegible] Mass.

My Dear [illegible] I beg to herewith [illegible] letter my resignation as pastor of [illegible]

Strong [illegible] consciousness of my innocence and firmly persuaded that God in His [illegible] I feel that I should not permit the shadow thrown across my life to darken the religious welfare of my church and its people whom I love.

I, therefore [illegible] position to secure [illegible]

With [illegible] thanks for the many kindnesses shown me by each and all of the members of my church, I am,

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) CLARENCE V. T. RICHESON.

The indictment against Richeson is regarded as one of the strongest documents of the kind ever drawn in this county. There are five counts in it for the purpose of covering every possible way in which Richeson could have conveyed poison to the girl.

Here is the language of the first count: [illegible] Massachusetts, Suffolk, SS.

At the [illegible] Court [illegible] of Boston, within [illegible] of Suffolk [illegible] present that Clarence V. T. [illegible] the fourteenth day of [illegible] Avis Linnell feloniously [illegible] a deadly poison, [illegible] a large quantity of a certain deadly poison called cyanide of potassium [illegible]

The said Richeson, then and there well knowing the same to be a deadly poison, with the intent that the said Linnell should take and swallow down the same into her body and that the said Linnell the said cyanide of potassium [illegible] given as aforesaid, did take [illegible] low down into her body, the [illegible] not knowing the same to [illegible] poison [illegible] the said Linnell became mortally sick and distempered in her body.

Which said poison, so given by said Richeson as aforesaid, and so by the said Linnel taken and swallowed down as aforesaid, and of the sickness and distemper occasioned thereby the said Linnell, on said fourteenth day of October in the year [illegible] died.

And so the jurors [illegible] oath aforesaid, do say that said Richeson [illegible] said Linnell feloniously, wilfully and of his malice aforethought did poison, kill and murder.

The first count recites that Richeson "did give cyanide of potassium" to Avis Linnell.

The second count recites that he "did send or convey" the poison to the girl in some [illegible]

The third count [illegible] caused it to be taken [illegible] by said Linnell in some way and manner and by some means unknown."

The fourth count, alleging a specific argument that the defendant may have used towards his victim recites [illegible] that the said cyanide of potassium so aforesaid, conveyed and given the said Linnell by Richeson, was a medicinal preparation." The same count also recites "the said Richeson well knowing [illegible] tion, but well knowing that it was a deadly poison, and intending that she should swallow it, the said cyanide of potassium, in the belief that it was a medicinal preparation.

Prisoner Acts Cheerful.

Richeson is a model prisoner in the Charles Street Jail. He takes exercise by walking every day, eats and sleeps regularly, [illegible] the newspapers and has [illegible] Bible. He has had a number of visits [illegible] is reported to be in a cheerful frame of mind.

Richeson was to have been married to Miss Violet Edmands on the [illegible] Miss Edmands suffered a great [illegible] of the tragedy as did [illegible] Early in the week they [illegible] in New York where they [illegible]

Before leaving Boston Mr. Edmands expressed [illegible] the clergyman. It is believed that Edmands furnished a large part of the fund that [illegible] for the defence of the [illegible]

[illegible] of the events of the week was the arrival in Boston of John L. Lee, a noted Virginia attorney, who will act as senior counsel in the defence of Richeson. Lee is one of the most successful criminal lawyers of the South.

With Lee will be associated Philip R. Dunbar, his father, Judge Dunbar and Beverly Harrison, a young attorney from the [illegible] of Richeson in Virginia. It is expected that the trial will take place in January and it is a foregone conclusion that it will be one of the greatest trials in the history of New England.

OLD TEACHERS TELL OF RICHESON AS BOY

By HARLEIGH B. SCHULTZ

AMHERST COURTHOUSE, Va., Nov. 4.—Clarence Thompson Richeson as a country stripling was ambitious of becoming a preacher, according to those who taught him at the Huff Creek schoolhouse, away back in the '80s. And then, a decade ago, when he came home on a visit like a hand some young Lochinvar out of the West, he consulted the old schoolmaster whom he [illegible] minister).

The teacher was John Wesley Redd Gibson [illegible] friend of the Richesons all his life. He is the best-known man in his profession in the county and up to [illegible] retired on a pension a few years ago he had trained the young [illegible]

His sister, too, Miss Ella Alice Gibson, now along in years, had the Cambridge pastor [illegible] until he [illegible] the mysteries of learning beyond the three R's and the "rule of three." He left her hands to study under brother, and because of their intimate association with the boy Clarence there is probably none here who remembers him so well.

Teachers Loevd Clarence.

[illegible]

[illegible] Miss Gibson [illegible] was too formal—"he was like an own child to me and Wes. Oh, it troubles me so to think of his being in jail with this [illegible] accusation over his head. And at night when I have to sit and think by the fire it all just comes back to me and I weep when I think I may have failed or left something unthought that might have prevented all this sorrow.

"You know a teacher is responsible for [illegible] and I take this terrible happening home to myself. Sometimes, oftentimes, I feel that I and not Clarence am to blame."

"That's true," said "Wes," now a hoary-headed old gentleman. "Why, I taught Clarence's father before him, and of all my pupils, I looked upon Clarence as the [illegible]

Tears in Teacher's Eyes.

Frequently as they talked tears dimmed the eyes of the aged brother and sister. Than these two more kind hearted creatures would be hard to find. To see them is to get an inspiration of all that the old-time schoolmaster and teacher meant. Theirs was a personal association with each pupil. In their teaching days, both Miss Ella and "Wes," as their former scholars tell of [illegible] after their morals than anything, though the textbooks were far from being neglected.

Brother and sister are living together in the mountains near Monitor. Their little white cottage, with its room where young Richeson used to sleep, stands on the crest of a hill—apparently every house seems to have been built on a hill in Amherst [illegible] From their front [illegible] the [illegible] of Richeson's [illegible] dwelling at its base. It's but a mile away—this means next-door neighbors in the Piedmont of Virginia. To travel by the road would take an hour. They said the lad Clarence used to run over in a quarter of an hour.

Off [illegible] can see the h[illegible] on whose top stood the old Huff Creek schoolhouse, now destroyed. Nothing now remains.

Miss Ella and her brother show all the earmarks of the teacher. Their language is precise and fluent. No better [illegible] in the county. Their knowledge is profound. She has taught at [illegible] ville, where the University of Virginia is, and for two years he tutored at the university. They still speak of [illegible] a wonder at mathematics.

Teachers Found Reading Bible.

Their greeting was whole souled.

"Come in and have a chair by the fire, for the air outside is raw and chilly," said Miss Ella.

"Make yourself at home, sir," said "Wes."

"We are plain people; poor, it may be, but you are welcome to what we have," said his sister. "Wes is pensioned off now, and we manage to get along somehow. Wes's health is poorly.

They had been reading the Bible when I drove up.

"I'm getting ready for Sunday school," said Miss Ella. "I've been attending the same one for twenty years and never missed a meeting [illegible] than three a year anyway. We read the Bible every day."

Just a [illegible] the man held for [illegible] ing Avis Linnell, for the couple associated his name with their Bible lessons.

"Clarence Richeson? Oh, we think of him every time we read our Scriptures," said Miss Ella. "He was the best boy we had in our school. He was bright and studious. He stood the highest in the school. He was as full of fun and mischief as anybody in the school, but there was [illegible] about him.

"I wasn't surprised when I heard he became a preacher. He was fitted for the work. He had a glorious voice. One day at recess time I overheard him telling how much he wanted to be a preacher when he [illegible]

"'I want to be at the head of a great church,' he said. 'When I finish school here I want to go to college and then study [illegible]' [illegible] sat at the side of the hearth interrupted.

"That's true," he said. "Some years ago he came here on a visit. I talked with him. He was a handsome young man then, with a mighty pert face and eyes.

"'Well, if it isn't Clarence, my boy!' I greeted him.

We clasped shoulders [illegible]

[illegible] I want to [illegible] Mr. Gibson [illegible] I wanted to [illegible] where to start. What school do you think is the best to prepare me for the pulpit?'

[illegible] We talked the matter over, but I do not recall what his decision was.

"I do remember, though, that he seemed very much put out because he thought my sister had snubbed him on the road.

"'What's the matter with Miss Ella?' he asked me. 'She passed me on the road and didn't speak, and it cut me to the heart, Mr. Gibson.' He seemed to be broken——"

Miss Ella put in an explanatory word:

"He was so handsome, a young man that really, sir, I didn't recognize him. He had altered so much. He was so fine-looking and distinguished [illegible] and I was looking so plain and so [illegible] I couldn't speak. I sent word to him that I had not recognized him and that he must pardon me."

Miss Ella brought out an invitation she had received to Richeson's marriage to Miss Edmands of Brookline.

"It came to Wes," she said. Her respect for her brother and desire to give him first place was one of the apparent traits of her character. It caused her to say, "You see I never felt slighted because Clarence didn't send me one. If there is anything to be given us I would want it given to Wes and be forgotten myself."

Her life has been a remarkable subjection of her personal self to the humbler role of looking after her less rugged brother's [illegible]

"No son ever had a better mother than Clarence Richeson," said the brother. "She was a Miss Rucker. Say, Ella, what was her first name?"

"Plain Sallie," came the answer. "A finer woman never lived. She was beautiful as a picture, and she had the grandest [illegible] and sang so sweetly. She was an angel, she was so good and unselfish. Clarence took after her. I used to say to him, 'Clarence, what a good mother you have.' He would reply softly, 'Yes, I know, and if I lost her, I would be losing the best friend in the world. ERUPTION CAUSED TERRIBLE SUFFERING

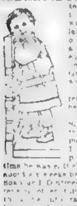
Baby's Body Covered with Large Sores. Seemed to Itch and Burn. Finger Nails Fell Off. Little or No Sleep. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. In 6 Weeks Cured.

"When my baby boy was six months old, his body was completely covered with large sores that seemed to itch and burn, and cause terrible suffering. The eruption began in pimples which would open and run making large sores. His hair came out and finger nails fell off, and the sores were over the entire body, causing little or no sleep for baby or myself. Great scabs would come off when I removed his shirt.



"We tried a great many remedies but none would help him. [illegible] Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before I could see that he was improving, and in six weeks time he was entirely cured. He had suffered about six weeks before we tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment although we had tried several other things, and doctors too. I think the Cuticura Remedies will do all that is claimed for them and a great deal more." (Signed) Mrs. Nona Truman Dodson, Mort[illegible] Jan. 28, 11.

For more than a generation Cuticura Soap and Ointment have afforded the most economical treatment for affections of the skin and scalp of infants, children and adults. Although sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world, a liberal sample of each, with 32-p. book on the skin, will be sent free, on application to Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., Dept. 18A, Boston.

Pests and Epidemics, the Study of Bugs, etc.

The study of Bugs and health are the leading factors of science today. Science has made rapid progress during the present century in many important and vital things, but never has it solved the [illegible] insect pests. No doubt many people have the idea that the present increasing agitation against pests is of recent origin, but it only calls attention to facts propounded and published centuries ago. It is said that a celebrated Italian physician named Mercurialis in the 16th century spoke of transmission of disease by pests, and it was also spoken of by Kircher in the 16th century. Other celebrities have held to the same theories, propounded and published in Rome, although scientists and physicians of those days gave their statements scant courtesy. Viewed in the light of our present day knowledge it shows these men to have been close observers with a clear knowledge which at the present time is scientifically demonstrated as fact.

Scientists are still compelled to call the attention of the public to the dangers of pests with little or no response on their part.

It is estimated that there are 1,500,000 cases of acute infectious Fevers, Typhoid, Measles, Scarlet Fever, Grip and Colds in this country annually with 100,000 deaths. There are 6,000 deaths annually from Cholera Infantum together with 40,000 deaths annually from Tuberculosis and Cancer which could be easily prevented if insect pests were exterminated.

It is estimated that the annual damage by insects is over $1,000,000,000. This terrible loss of life and money is absolutely unnecessary. The severe epidemics of typhoid in our camps during the Spanish-American War were attributed by the investigating commission to insects. Pathogenic bacteria have been demonstrated in some insects' prolesses, on their feet and their digestive tract, also their excreta. These infections are best adapted to transmission from one to [illegible] Typhoid, Tuberculosis and other diseases.

COL. THOMAS VARLAND RICHESON TELLS STORY OF SON'S BOYHOOD DAYS

"Back in the old days he would go to his mother's room and take her bible."

Aged Virginia Planter After Visit to Boy's Cel Declares Him Guiltless

THE [illegible] story of "My Boy" [illegible] Thomas Varland Richeson [illegible] Clarence V. T. Richeson [illegible] exclusively to the AMERICAN [illegible].

The aged [illegible] of the [illegible] had an interview with his son in the Charles street jail [illegible] dwells upon the regret that he feels that his son Clarence ever left his Virginia home.

The story is told by the father of Clarence's severe, almost fatal illness, when he was a [illegible] from typhoid pneumonia. It was believed that this attack left the boy physically impaired.

The religious element in Clarence's make-up began to manifest itself when he was at high school. He attended a revival conducted by Methodists at Amherst, Va., and professed religion. But he did not join the church. Later he joined the Baptist denomination.

"A father's love would be no love," writes the grizzled veteran of the Civil War, "did it not exist through life despite all obstacles."

MY BOY

By THOMAS VARLAND RICHESON.

My boy, an affectionate son always wrote to me from the time of his first hour from home with dutiful regularity. Had he not done so, and had he not written such straightforward, impressive letters all the time, I would not now be able to give so clear an account of my recollections of him in the last twenty years.

Without assuming herein the functions of a lecturer, and with no wish to sermonize, I would like to say to [illegible] who have just left or who [illegible] leaving the homes of their [illegible] duty they owe and [illegible] never be neglected [illegible] weekly letter to the "old folks at home." I won't pause to dilate upon the happiness that those letters will give. I do not mean to say, and I hope I may be forgiven if the suggestion is self-raising, that there [illegible] ever come a time when any other young man's letters to home will mean as much as my boy's now mean to me.

He wrote them to me as a token of affection, and it now looks like every word he indited has been scrolled in gold, for it enables me now to write about a past in which there is nothing to conceal.

When my boy Clarence left his old Virginia home to seek his fortune in the West he accomplished what I myself desired to do in boyhood. Maybe if I had done so I would never be penning these words, which, as I have said before, are meant in no effort to create sympathy for a brave but unfortunate young man, but rather in an imperative demand upon an excited public to accord him perfect justice and fair play.

As a young man before marriage I myself was very anxious to go West with the growing country. My Uncle Tom, the same man I have spoken of before as the one who had been provost marshal of St. Louis during the war, under appointment by General Grant, asked my father to let him take me out toward the country beyond the Mississippi.

"Billy," said my Uncle Tom to father, "I want to take this boy (meaning myself) to the West. There is no business future just now for a young man in Virginia. Let me take him to St. Louis with me. I will put him in business."

I wanted to go. For two days and nights I talked over the proposition with my father, and on the third day he called me to go for a walk with him down the lane through his tobacco fields.

Carried Father's Blessing.

It was a prophetic walk. Somehow when I recall it now it was a walk such as I took many years after with my boy Clarence. The talk I had that morning with my father was something like the talk I afterward came to have with my best loved son. The parallel I will leave for my readers to draw. The great variance and I might say the only variance—is that my boy went away from me with my permission and my blessing.

Had I called upon him to stay at home as my father requested me, I should not be now the distressed old man which I am, and my boy would not to-night, I am sure, be resting in the cell an accused felon.

On th[illegible] morning that my father [illegible] me out to walk he said to me:

"Varland, I don't want you to go away from home. You have just come home from the war and I believe it is the duty of every Virginia boy who fought under Bob Lee to stay in this State. There is work for you to do here. The State needs you and I need you. I am going along in years and have not got much more time on earth. Your mother, too, needs you at home."

[illegible] as I yearned to get out into the world, to get away from the devastated country which surrounded me, impatient as I was to be up and doing, I could not withstand my father's words. I told him that I wouldn't go. I told him that I would remain at home on the old plantation until I was at least twenty-one years old.

When my boy Clarence was away from home, however, there was no such scene. Maybe it was because I had more faith in him than my father had in me. Maybe it was because Clarence implanted in me more confidence than I was able to summon in my father. That, however, is just at the moment another question.

Clarence's impulse to go West must have been inherited from me, just as I believe his religious fervor was inherited from his sainted mother. I recall that after I was twenty-one years old I wrote secretly a letter to my uncle Tom and told him that I wanted to go West.

This same Uncle Tom to whom I have referred several times in this article was by now a prosperous business man in St. Louis. He was president of the St. Louis White Lead & Oil Company. Even in those days it was a wealthy corporation. I do not know if it is in existence now. Possibly it is not, in its originally incorporated form.

In about two weeks after I wrote I received a letter from Uncle Tom in which he told me that he would give me a position in his office just as soon as I reported to him. Again I went to my father and told him the contents of the letter I had received.

Stayed With Aged Father.

My father at that time was seventy-six years old—older than I am to-day—and God knows the years are bearing heavily upon me now. We sat out on the porch of his house as we talked over the new proposition which came from my Uncle Tom. Once again my father voiced his objection to my leaving home. He said to me:

"I have raised you, Varland, the best I could. I have educated you the best I knew how and the best I could during [illegible] pitiful times of war. I want you to ask yourself what your duty is now."

I got up from my chair and walked across the lawn and back to him. In the twenty [illegible] that I left his side [illegible]. When I returned to him I took both his hands in mine and said: "Father, that settles it. If you think it is my duty to stay here I will stay."

And I never left him. I remained on the old homestead, and when I was married I brought him to live with us.

He died in 18[illegible]. I am proud to say that the last seven years of his life spent with [illegible] married and was raising a family were the happiest [illegible].

My boy Clarence was just one year old when my father died. What I am writing [illegible] may be news to my boy if he [illegible] this in his cell. For I never [illegible] of an opportunity to [illegible] he was so young [illegible]. But oh, how I [illegible] now that when Clarence first spoke to me of leaving Virginia [illegible] and at once [illegible] wishes.

Still I believe it would have been impossible to have changed my boy's mind. As a youth he had greater determination than I had, and though I think that he would have [illegible] as his father requested, he would have forced events to shape themselves so that I later would have given my permission for him to depart from the family fireside.

As I look at it now it seems to me that it was foreordained for Clarence to leave me.

Of all my children Clarence was not only the most lovable, but he was the brightest. Always he was wanting to get at his books. Before he was five years old his mother and I taught him "his letters." Before he was six years old he could read simple sentences which he picked out of the newspapers which found their way through the infrequent mails to our secluded home.

We didn't have any magazines in those days, and the books in our library were limited to a sort digestible only to mature minds. But even that five-year-old youngster was ever at a book [illegible] that he [illegible] understand the words he was picking out of the pages. When he could get no other book, for often we took the books away from him for fear he would damage them, [illegible] to his mother's room [illegible].

It was just about the time that Clarence was started [illegible]. It is very hard for [illegible] parent, to recall [illegible] remote family history [illegible] impressed upon my [illegible] that my boy was but six years [illegible] when he began to go to school [illegible] way I remember [illegible]. The legal age [illegible] attend the sparsely [illegible] public schools in Virginia at that time was seven years. No child younger than that was admitted. An [illegible] public school could be [illegible] in any section only upon a written demand that the district contain [illegible].

We wanted to start a new school in my neighborhood and we were lacking the requisite number of children. Clarence could read and write more than [illegible] well for a child of six, so I got on my horse and rode over to see old John H. Watts, a school trustee and one of the most influential men in the county. I told him that we needed the school, and that I had a boy who ought to be enrolled among the children whose parents demanded the privilege. Mr. Watts knew Clarence and I did not have to enlarge upon the [illegible] attainments in [illegible] my case before the trustees.

He told me that he considered him the brightest boy in all Amherst. He said there would be no trouble in establishing the new school and that no question would ever be raised as to Clarence's eligibility to entrance on account of his years.

"Such a boy as your son Clarence," said Mr. Watts to me, "is entitled to the best education that we can provide him, and the county can't do its share for him any too soon."

Thus it was that my boy, Clarence Virgil Thompson Richeson, was started upon the schooling from which he never desisted until he had worked his way from the elementary branches through all the higher institutions until he had attained two degrees in two theological seminaries.

"Accusation Is False"

[illegible] is now the man accused of causing the death of a fellow creature!

That accusation is false. It cannot but be false. As I go along and trace step by step the career of my [illegible] ... terrors [illegible] and fatal. [illegible] offered a [illegible] prayers [illegible] my boy's [illegible] father [illegible] be spared to [illegible].

Still I believe that those prayers which were answered then were destined to carry him throughout a natural life. My faith now is stronger than [illegible].

[illegible] that these horrible charges [illegible] of the mysterious workings of God's ways.

When I first heard this awful news I said to myself [illegible] my love for him will [illegible] the first frost of Autumn kills a tender plant. Even now I am sorely torn by two thoughts. I ask myself the question if I should still love him were he proved guilty, or would I blot from memory all the beautiful recollections I have of him and, again facing the world, say, "It was no son of mine; it was none of the Richeson stock who has brought about this blight upon an honored name."

There, there, I have opened an old father's heart to the universe. A father's love would be no love did it not exist through life despite all o[illegible] the love of a parent can survive. The law is the law. Ever have I subscribed to the laws of my country. If my boy is guilty I can go no further. My boy is NOT GUILTY.

I have strayed from the thoughts [illegible] ... Indeed [illegible] ... to Clarence's [illegible] West. [illegible] that the reason [illegible] ... I desire to repeat that it was at the request of his mother that I took a second wife.

[illegible] after the death of [illegible] mother [illegible] went out [illegible] she told me frankly the fear she held of the end so soon to come, an approaching end, which at the time, I, with a man's bluntness, had failed to observe. She said it was her wish that I find a mother for the children.

To offset further the report that Clarence and his older brother, Douglas, left home on account of displeasure at my second marriage, I have [illegible] ... to time as I write the story of my boy to correct these errors.

On account of his delicate health from the time Clarence was ten years o[illegible] I sent him to [illegible] ... and an honored resident of Amherst.

Preparing for College.

For one term Clarence attended the [illegible] High School, a preparatory [illegible] University of [illegible] ... ambitions [illegible] and at Kenmore [illegible]. He was a bright [illegible] far above the average.

[illegible] time that Clarence was [illegible] there was a great [illegible] over the State [illegible] ... the church then [illegible] ... time a professed Christian without formally joining any church.

It seems predestination now that he later became not only a minister, but a minister of the Baptist faith.

The next installment of Colonel Richeson's story of his son's life will be printed in next Sunday's AMERICAN.

Most of the old men object to retiring. They say they can still do a full day's work. The heads of departments do not agree with them. Still, under the act ... over sixty can be forced to retire unless he is physically incapable of work ... and only those over seventy can be forcibly retired.

Several old men who have been earning $2 a day or more for the last forty years have saved their money and own considerable property. Many have grown up families who are prosperous and able to take care of them, but they prefer to be independent and continue to work while they are able.

Nearly all the thirty-five over seventy are in excellent health and mentally and physically strong. Hard work has not brutalized them and they are as quick witted and entertaining as men thirty years younger. They take an interest in politics and some of them have considerable influence in their wards.

COMMON SENSE IN MEDICINE

The Wealthy Can Afford Doctors and Nurses.

Many Good People "Cannot Afford to be Sick."

Proprietary Medicines Prove Efficient and Economical.

Wealthy families do not feel obliged to consider the matter of expense in case ... treatment is needed. They can afford to consult physicians, to get prescriptions and to have medicines specially put up for them. Most families, however—and they are the bone and sinew of the country, intelligent, prudent, economical men and women—have so little ... go and come on that professional services are out of the question, except where they are absolutely necessary. These families, these millions of men and women of only ordinary means, regard it as "common sense in medicine" to avail themselves of the leading proprietary medicines, which are so remarkably effective and so easily obtainable.

The makers of Hood's Sarsaparilla are justified in saying that for all the diseases and ailments for which this great ... is recommended thousands of families have found it entirely satisfactory. It is unquestionably the leading proprietary medicine for impure blood, lack of strength, that tired feeling, loss of appetite, and for severer troubles, such as rheumatism, eczema or salt rheum, catarrh, blood poisoning, bad sores, scrofula and other diseases.

It has effected more cures than any other medicine.

Harry D. Frank, Gloversville, N. Y., says: "I had a large bunch on my neck, which appeared to be scrofula. I have taken a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and the bunch has entirely disappeared."

Any preparation said to be "just as good" as Hood's Sarsaparilla is inferior, costs less to make and yields the dealer a larger profit. Insist on having Hood's and get it to-day in usual liquid form or tablets called Sarsatabs.

Italian Army of 25,000 Facing Disastrous Defeat in Conquest of Tripoli

Invading Army Again Moves Its Lines Forward Against the Turks.

LONDON, Nov. 4—That the Italian army in Tripoli is facing disaster and ultimate defeat in the war with Turkey is the burden of an uncensored message received here today from the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Company, Ltd., at Tripoli, who has arrived at Malta.

The correspondent brands the statement in the Italian press as falsehood, misrepresenting the entire situation.

SAYS ITALIANS HAVE LOST HALF THEIR GROUNDS

"The Italians hold, with nearly twice as many men, half the ground that they held three weeks ago," the message reads. "They have lost 1,000 men in killed and wounded and hundreds of others are sick.

"Great number of Arabs were shot in cold blood.

"Of the engagement of October 26, he says:

"Far from being a decisive victory the first fight ended in disaster. Had the enemy had a few thousand men at any point instead of a few hundred, the victory would have been on the other side. The Italian line was broken in two places by less than 200 Arabs and the situation was saved only by the gallant charge of 100 cavalry, who managed to kill off scores of the storming party.

"General Caneva, the Italian commander, became so alarmed that he abandoned all the outer works southeast of the city, including the strong Turkish fort.

25,000 Italians With Backs to Sea."

"Twenty-five thousand Italians," the message continued, "find themselves with backs to the sea, cramped and confined with an active enemy within a few yards of them and with cholera raging among them, so despite official efforts to conceal the truth, there have been many cases among the troops and the city ... is suffering so much that whole streets in Tripoli have been closed ... tries."

The correspondent says the Turks and Arabs hold the oasis, which is fifteen miles long and from two to five miles deep. They can subsist there all Winter on oats and olives and harrass the Italians by nightly raids. The oasis is a natural defence. The Italian soldiers are tired of the war, which, instead of a short campaign is developing into a long struggle. They are forced to lie in the trenches and endure the sandstorms and heavy rainfalls and be always on the alert for night attacks.

Enraged at Ambushes.

"For four days after the engagement of October 23, the Italian soldiers engaged in indiscriminate slaughter of the Arab population under General Caneva's sanction," continues the correspondents. "Caneva first issued a general order to shoot all Arabs found with arms, but only when caught by troops in charge of officers. The troops complained that numbers of Arabs had hidden their arms and resumed work as innocent husbandmen. Thereupon General Caneva issued another order to shoot all Arabs who could reasonably be suspected of having borne arms.

"The blood of the men was up, naturally, as they had seen their comrades shot from behind and, it is reported even mutilated, though of this, it is impossible to ascertain the truth. With their excitable temperament and highly developed imagination, the Italian suspected every living soul of guilt, and for four days gangs of soldiers, often without officers, shot every one they encountered.

The correspondent gives instances witnessed by himself and his colleagues and follows with signed statements by the later, made at the request of the British consul, and affidavits of three German residents in refutation of the Italian premiers denial that women and children were shot.

"The troops," adds the correspondent "made a clean sweep of that portion of the oasis in which they were fired upon from the rear, although there is no certain proof that any Arab in the west end of that section took part in the rising, and there were vast numbers of women and boys who were perfectly innocent. Of these nearly all the men and even the boys above a certain age were shot while undoubtedly many women perished.

Reservists Are Mobilized.

Dispatches from Rome say mobilization of Reservists of 1889 has been announced. This announcement is accompanied by the explanation that the reason for the summoning of these 90,000 men is the Italian government's determination to end the war at once. The reserves will be started to the front without delay. This is in effect a further notification to the Turkish government that Italy has the men and money to conduct the campaign to an energetic and successful end.

It is also learned that Italy has fitted up Tobruk, Tripoli, as a naval base. This step was anticipated when the Italian war office decided ... on Tobruk as one of the places at which to land troops. Naval operation against Turkey will be conducted from this point.

Further changes in the plan to end the war are reported from Rome. It is now said that Italy has abandoned the original idea of occupying one or more islands of the Grecian Archipelago, as it is considered that this step would not bring sufficient pressure upon Turkey to compel her to yield.

To Occupy Syrian Coast.

It is more probable that a naval demonstration on the Syrian coast with ... even ... occupation of some point will be decided upon. About ten days ago the government confidentially notified the powers of the cessation of Ottoman rule in Tripoli and Cyrenaica, but the official proclamation of annexation to Italy ... as Premier San Galliano ... communication to ... military operation on the part of ... will demonstrate her effectual possession or the withdrawal of the enemy ... knowledging incapacity to hold her position.

Arabs ... secretly ... the movements of the Ottoman troops to ... told General Caneva ... at Tripoli, and ... the latter to make counter moves. ... was either shot or poisoned.

Arabs' Cruelty to Turks.

Officers of the Italian troops report great cruelty on the part of the Arabs toward the wounded Italians. These victims it is said, are ruthlessly ... robbed, stripped of their clothing and then the bodies are terribly mutilated. In some instances fingers have been cut off in order that the tribesmen might the more quickly obtain the rings which the victims wore.

On the other hand ... complaints are being made by the Turkish government that the Italians are practicing barbarous torture upon their prisoners. Dispatches from Constantinople say that the government has lodged a protest with the European powers which signed The Hague agreement of 1907 against the execution of Arabs in Tripoli.

Neshed Bey, Turkish commander in Tripoli, reports with regard to the killing of women and children by the Italians that many of the victims were bound with ropes before they were murdered. The Armenian newspaper Arevelk has been suspended for daring to discredit the talk of a massacre of Arabs by the Italians and recalling the Turkish massacres of the Armenians.

Italians Advance Lines.

Reports from Tripoli to-night say that everything is quiet. The Italian lines have been advanced slightly. The ruins of the agricultural college and Fort Misra, which are held by the Arabs, have been shelled from a distance of 2,000 meters. It seems that the enemy thought they were held by the Italians. The Italian batteries replied on general principles and silenced the Turkish guns.

The Marquis Theodoli, Italian delegate to the Public Debt Commission, and other notable Italians, have been expelled from Constantinople.

A Tripoli correspondent says Italy's losses in Tripoli since October 23 amount to 1500 men, of which 280 were killed. Eighty-seven soldiers are suffering from cholera.

Cholera is rapidly increasing among the Arabs and Jews. No room exists in the city for the expected re-enforcements and their arrival must further increase the ravages of the cholera.

Reports Heavy Italian Losses.

Dispatches from Malta report that a newspaper correspondent arriving there today from the city of Tripoli, makes the assertion that the Italian government has wholly misrepresented the situation there and by the exercise of a censorship even more severe than that imposed by Japan during the Russo-Japanese war, has prevented information of the real trend of events from getting to the outside world. The correspondent makes the startling statement that the ... have lost ... Tripoli and its vicinity ... than 1000 killed ... the Turks have ... from positions they ... occupation, until at ... SISTER DEVAMATA IS HERE TO WORK

Comes to Boston From Indian Monastery to Harmonize Religions of U. S.

By SYBIL WARNE.

Sister Devamata, direct from an Indian monastery, is in Boston with a mission to harmonize all the religions of the country. She has taken ... at ... St. Botolph street, where those who would learn Boston's latest religious teaching may find her robed in spotless white.

The color scheme of the little room where the foreign priestess teaches the belief which she says will eliminate the great worries of life is white. The room is white. Its furniture is white. The shrine ... she has set ... is white.

It would seem that Sister Devamata would banish all the dark and dismal things that bring unhappiness with the white light of her teachings and purity of her environment. There was a white light in the eyes of this ... woman and a brilliant sparkle to her words as she talked yesterday of what she hoped to do in Boston.

To Enlarge Atmosphere.

... not ... to make any converts ... Sister Devamata said, "nor to ... creed, but to enlarge the atmosphere of belief."

She closed her eyes, and, with her hands crossed over her breast, solemnly chanted a benediction.

"May He Who is the Father of Heaven to Christians, Allah to the Mohammedans, Buddha to the Buddhists, Ahura Mazda to the Zoroastrians and Divine Mother and Brahman to the Hindus, grant unto all peace and blessing. Peace! Peace! Peace be unto us and all living beings."

Slowly she opened her eyes. She gazed about contemplatively for a moment. Then, she said:

"This is what Boston needs. I have not come here to make converts, but to make the religion of America more serviceable to its people. I can look to the Heavens and see God in everything. He is in every one of us. He comes out of us all. We have much of him in our ... and out of us He comes, so that there is something divine in every one of us."

Sister Devamata then declared she wanted the people of Boston to appreciate their religion more.

"It is not a form, nor a creed," she asserted, "neither is it a ceremony. It is not located in Boston, it is in yourselves."

Would Promote Harmony.

Many have come before with an ambition to unite the sects, to establish harmony in place of chaos in the churches, but her mission, she stated, was to bring about harmony between all the religions. Her task, she said, was to reconcile the methods of the Salvation Army to the rites of the Brahmans, to harmonize the religions of the Methodists and the disciples of Confucious, and to promote that unity of effort which will make a New England Yankee feel at home in a Turkish mosque.

For Americans she recommends the contemplative life.

"That kind of life will turn us inward," she asserted. "Suppose we had more contemplation right here in Boston. Would there be this dissatisfaction with life? Men and women are weary with thinking about what does not do them any good. I want to sit, to breathe, and to contemplate—for religion is an individual matter."

Sister Devamata closed her eyes once more. She intertwined her fingers across her breast and in a voice that sounded miles away she concluded.

Need of Contemplation.

Yes, if Boston people would contemplate more, instead of rushing along at this breakneck speed—if they would sit down and ponder every day what may be—life would be brighter and work would not be so hard. Boston should think of the leaders of the past. All have stood for the highest things. Ah! how simple is religion after all."

An attendant came and beckoned. The priestess bent her head in recognition and soon after signified that the interview was at an end.

Herbs and Flowers Cure Catarrh

A Safe, Simple, Reliable Remedy Which Costs Nothing to Try.

You need not suffer from catarrh, bronchitis, lingering colds or other catarrhal troubles. After years of research and experiment Dr. Blosser discovered a compound of herbs, leaves and flowers which by a unique method is applied to every nook and corner of the mucous membrane in the head, nose, throat and lungs.

Any sufferer, after giving it a trial, can readily see why it is so greatly superior to such ordinary treatments as sprays, ointments, salves, liquid or tablet medicines, because all these do not and cannot reach all the affected parts, while Dr. Blosser's method reaches every spot; and this explains, at least in part, the wonderful success with which it is meeting. The full size package costs but one dollar. It is harmless, pleasant to use, and is easily applied even by a child.

No matter how deep-seated your catarrh may be; no matter how long it has troubled you; no matter if other remedies have failed; you should give this treatment a trial, and it will do for you what it has done for thousands of other sufferers. Write at once to Dr. J. W. Blosser, 203 Walton street, Atlanta, Ga., in order to avail yourself of his offer of a free trial package of the remedy and an illustrated booklet which gives all the facts about catarrh. It is not necessary to send any money—simply send your name and address.

MEDFORD WINS OVER EVERETT IN FAST GAME

Crowd of 8,000 Sees Medford Romp Home Winner in a Slugging Game.

LUCK FAVORS MEDFORD

Lawless and Brawley Stars in Big Suburban League; Both Teams Penalized

By OTTO B. HANSON

In one of the fiercest schoolboy games ever played, Medford beat Everett at Everett yesterday afternoon by 14 to 11. The game was fought out to the finish and the Blue and White team was not sure of its victory till the final whistle sounded.

A crowd of about 8,000 witnessed the battle and the excitement ran on a high pitch during all four periods. The weather was clear and the field in good condition and the players were in a fighting mood.

Both teams played a rough game, slugging and doing other unsportsmanlike tricks in about every scrimmage. The Medford players slugged and they suffered the most, for Jack Lawless was put out of the game and he was seriously missed [illegible] that Medford [illegible] with it. Twice in the [illegible] the ball within [illegible] it could not get [illegible] the first time Medford [illegible] and held on the 4 yard [illegible] Brickley [illegible] Medford's yard line [illegible] was [illegible] over the line [illegible] and it was a [illegible] supporters.

Good Work by Lawless

Medford scored in the first period, thanks to the great speed and dodging of Jack Lawless. Everett kicked off to Medford to start the game. The Everett players were offside and the kickoff was brought back and Brickley kicked off again from the forty-five yard line. Medford tried one rush for a gain of a few yards and Lawless punted to Everett's twenty-yard line. Brawley batted the ball and Medford was penalized five yards. Everett was penalized fifteen yards for slugging and Brickley punted out of danger. Jack Lawless received the punt, but could only take the ball back a few yards when he was downed by Reed in midfield. On the next play Lawless carried the ball through Everett's left tackle and ran with great interference for the first score of the game. It was a great run and the interference and the use of the straight arm was perfect. Brawley kicked the goal. This was all the scoring in the first period. The quarter ended with the ball in Medford's possession in Everett territory.

Valentine Goes Over.

Everett kicked off and the ball rolled over for a touchback and Medford brought the ball out to the 25 yard line. Lawless punted and Brickley fumbled the ball and Valentine recovered and ran 40 yards for a touchdown. Brawley failed to kick the goal. This was the end of the Medford scoring but it was enough.

The Everett backs excelled those of the Medford team. They gained good ground and made first down on rushing several times but the fumbling of Brickley proved costly. The Everett linesmen outweighed the Medford forwards, but only at times did they outplay them.

Both teams suffered the loss of many yards through penalties. Everett suffered the heaviest, being set back 90 yards for offside, slugging and interfering within the 20-yard zone, and Medford was put back 15 yards. The lineup:

The Indians [illegible] score principally in the first period of play though they out-played the red and blue all through the game. Lone Star took the ball on a deceptive double pass and crossed Penn's goal line five minutes after the game started. Welch, on the same close formation play, emerged for a run of 100 yards and a touchdown a few minutes later.

The Indians made their final score in the third period of play when Arcasa rolled over the goal mark after his team mates had raced around Penn's ends and the defensive backs were groggy from watching the flights of the red men. Penn made a great stand in the last period but could not force the Indians' line.

Alec Thayer's punting saved the Red and Blue and regained much of the ground made on end rushes by the Indians [illegible]

TIGERS PROVE BIG SURPRISE

HOBBS REVIEWS BIG BATTLE

By HENRY H. HOBBS

HENRY H. HOBBS

PRINCETON, N. J., Nov. 4.—It was Harvard's ball on Princeton's 20-yard line. Hollister went back to drop kick. Steve White, Princeton's baseball captain, broke through the line, knocked the ball out of Hollister's hand as he was about to kick it, dashed ahead, picked the ball up on the bound, and ran 75 yards for a touchdown. This gave the Tigers first blood, and it was this play which gave the game to Princeton, even though Harvard later on made a touchdown after Princeton had made the margin safe by adding two points on a safety.

HARVARD RULED THE FAVORITE

Harvard [illegible] the field the general favorite [illegible] home [illegible] Tiger [illegible] invasion of [illegible] the latter [illegible] [illegible] Harvard [illegible] Brown [illegible] the Crimson [illegible] although they [illegible] through Felton's [illegible]

Last Saturday Harvard defeated Sprague [illegible] team to lay they included [illegible] which played first-class football [illegible] This was the reason [illegible] not shine.

With [illegible] rushing game, Harvard [illegible] when in the [illegible] nearer her goal. No less than [illegible] the Crimson was within good striking distance of the Tiger goal line, but each time their rushers were stopped without gain or were actually thrown for substantial losses.

Great Wendell Helpless.

This is a tribute to Princeton's defence in her last ditch, and also shows that Harvard has [illegible] final punch necessary to follow up advantages in forcing the ball over the opponent's line. It was an unusual sight for the Crimson followers to witness Wendell who may consider an irresistible [illegible] to be forced back or stopped without a gain when near the opponent's goal.

At such times the Princeton line got [illegible] Harvard got under the Harvard players and swept the line back.

Later in the game when Freedly was substituted at quarterback just before going on the field of play he received instructions from Percy Houghton, Harvard's head coach.

At that time Harvard was within striking distance of the Tiger line and Freedly ordered a forward pass. This play along with the other forward passes which Freedly used so frequently [illegible] ordered [illegible] put into the game [illegible] forward line passes lost all of [illegible] an admission [illegible] Harvard [illegible] his line forcing game [illegible] near the Princeton line.

In justice to the Harvard outfit it should be stated that Princeton's rushing game was not any more successful than their own. Wendell and Dewitt were used by their respective teams to carry the burden of the line assault. In the [illegible] Princeton was more successful [illegible] yard and to this fact can be attributed their gaining their victory. Princeton used few forward passes, while the Crimson, particularly after Freedly took charge of the team, used them often, and for frequent substantial gains.

Crimson Lacked the Punch.

Harvard's most successful forward pass was made straight over the line, and this carried the ball on more than one occasion within striking distance territory. The final punch which was so badly needed by the Cambridge players to rush the ball across was lacking.

Felton's absence was missed in that the Harvard team was without a good punter. This fact led to one of their best halfbacks, Campbell, being taken out of the game and Pierce, a punter, was substituted. Reynolds did this work after he substituted Pierce.

Dewitt did the kicking for Princeton, and did altogether very well. Several times he was forced to kick from behind his goal line, and on such occasions he not only secured distance, but placed the PRINCETON, N. [illegible] to [illegible] A poor [illegible] While the big [illegible] the game to Princeton [illegible] when the [illegible] and tore great [illegible] on team and itself too late.

DEFEAT CAME AS BIG SURPRISE

The defeat came as a great blow to Harvard supporters and with good reason, Harvard came to Princeton the big favorite and during part of the game showed a better knowledge of football than their rivals.

Clean Played Game.

The game while hard played and resulting in injuries to the Harvard players, was clean and peculiarly free from penalties, although both sides lost some ground because of illegal playing.

Early in the game Potter's knee was wrenched and he had to quit. Shortly after Gardiner's wrist was strained and he was taken out. The loss of these two men weakened the Harvard team and the men for a time seemed to lose control.

Princeton's safety came at the start of the second half. [illegible] plunges failed to gain, Princeton kicked. The ball bounced along past Wendell, and Gardiner recovered it within a yard of the goal. Dunlap, the Tiger end, was upon him and threw the quarter over the line, thus scoring two more points for Princeton.

Harvard came right back [illegible] on a spectacular run of thirty-five yards by Wendell through left tackle, a couple of line plunges and a forward pass from Gardiner to O'Brien, the ball was put on Princeton's fifteen yard line. Princeton stiffened and the forward pass was resorted to. On the third down the ball went to Princeton [illegible] Tiger goal. This gave Harvard the [illegible] for a five yard [illegible] ended.

Reynolds Makes Gain

Freedley lost five yards on an attempted forward pass, and the second try at this play netted nothing. Freedley dropped back and the ball [illegible] Reynolds who ran twenty yards [illegible]

On the next rush the Harvard forwards tore a great hole through Princeton's center and Wendell went over for a touchdown. Captain Fisher kicked the goal.

Try as they might, however, from this point on Harvard was not really very dangerous, for the continued fight was beginning to tell. Princeton evidently was playing a defensive game, and sparring for time and she did it successfully.

The Crimson drove the Tigers back and back, but the ball could not be consistently advanced, although several times Harvard made first down and seemed to promise a return of that fierce onslaught which characterized its play earlier in the game. The ball see-sawed back and forth and finally the game ended with the ball in Princeton's possession at midfield.

A Punting Duel.

The first period was a punting duel with Harvard being driven back near her own goal for the first part, and the tables suddenly being turned, Princeton found herself driven back. Neither side seemed to have yet found itself. There was a good deal of fumbling by the Crimson, Pierce being the first offender, but luckily Harvard always recovered. Let it be said here that it seems as though Coach Haughton made a big mistake by putting Pierce in to take Campbell's place in this period, for the former is too light to be of any use on runs and his punting, for which he was put in the game, was unusually poor. The only good ground gained in this period was Smith's end around play, the last rush gaining twelve yards on this formation.

It was well along in the second period, after Potter had left the game, that Pierce made a flukey little kick that went out of bounds on Harvard's thirty-yard line and gave Princeton the ball on this line. Harvard's line was as tight as a drum, however, and Pendleton resorted to a drop kick. Huntington broke through the line and after blocking Pendleton's kick, scampered after the ball which was bounding back to the Tigers' goal, and picking it up ran to Princeton's thirty yard line before he was pulled down by White's flying tackle from behind.

Almost a Goal

Princeton tightened here and Milholland was sent in to kick. He booted the ball away from the thirty-yard line. For a moment it looked like a goal and Harvard's followers went wild, but the ball sailed a bit to the left and Princeton got it on her twenty-five yard line on the touchback.

A few moments later Harvard again [illegible] kicked out on his [illegible] Wendell went through left [illegible] and Princeton was [illegible] 15-yard line [illegible] ineffectual attempts to gain through the line forced Gardiner to [illegible] a drop kick. Something happened and the ball was not passed [illegible] went to Princeton on downs.

[illegible] the ball was [illegible] Princeton's 5-yard [illegible] down that [illegible] attempt [illegible] drop kick resulted in Princeton's touchdown. Princeton had a team of individuals who played a remarkable game and caused much trouble to Harvard, particularly Captain Hart, who was all over the field and in every play stopping many of Harvard's attempts with Wendell carrying the ball.

The excellent interference of the Crimson team for the runner shown last week was noticeably absent, probably because of the individual brilliance of some of Princeton's linesmen, who broke through and tore things up badly at times.

Tiger Defence Stiff.

For opening holes, Harvard's line was the superior of Princeton's except when near the goal. Then the Tiger defence always proved sufficient to stop the Crimson's onslaught. Harvard's attack was ragged and frequently Wendell ran into his own interference and dumped himself. What stopped Harvard mostly was the speed and skill shown by Dunlap and White, the Princeton ends. Except on the end around plays they were never drawn in, they were down the field like a flash and their following of the ball was ball so that Harvard was unable to try for a goal from placement.

HARVARD HELPLESS BEFORE PRINCETON

Harvard Kickers Erratic.

The Harvard kicking was very erratic, at times the kicks would be exceptionally good, only to be followed by a short kick out of bounds or securing very little distance because of the ball being kicked too high.

The Princeton backfield in catching punts were very clever which was in marked contrast to Potter, Gardner and Freedly's handling of punts.

Although possession of the ball was not lost on such occasions, the delay in recovery lost all chances for the return run. It was poor handling of a Princeton kick the ball bounding along on the ground. Gardner picked the ball up when near his goal line and made the fatal mistake of running parallel with it instead of down the field. A heavy Princeton line man in rushing down to cover the kick tackled Gardner, who had placed himself in a fatal position and was buried over the goal line by the Tiger's momentum.

Each suffered about equally in respect to penalties, but in the last period, when Harvard was advancing well in the rushing game, one of their men interfered with a Princeton fair catch on the latter's 35-yard line. [illegible] yard [illegible] then brought the ball nearly to the middle of the field and Princeton promptly booted it far into Harvard's territory.

Harvard's lone tally came as a result of a Princeton fumble on their 25-yard line. After Wendell failed to gain [illegible] through the line, Freedly made a forward pass to Reynolds who carried the ball to the 2-yard line. With only 2 yards to go [illegible] time Wendell was successful and the [illegible]

Through Princeton's touchdown in the first half they rightly decided, in the last two quarters to resort to a defensive game. They kicked frequently on the first down, aiming to keep the ball well down in Harvard's territory.

Played Kicking Game.

When Harvard was unable to gain consistently in the rushing game they likewise resorted to the kicking game, hoping that Princeton would follow and give them the ball near the Tiger line.

The game ended in a punt duel, the ball going from one territory into the other. On the Princeton there were several who stood out prominently by their brilliant work. Captain Hart at left tackle, not only made many tackles on kicks, but he was a tower of strength through which Harvard failed to gain. White will go down with a pose in the hall of fame at Princeton through his [illegible] run for the Tigers' touchdown. The Princeton ends this same White and Dunlap, played cleverly. They refused to be drawn in and killed all attempts to circle around them.

Blumenthal at centre justified all the good things expected from him. His defensive [illegible] was magnificent, which overshadowed by a small margin his offensive work. His passes after many under trying conditions, were a pleasure to follow.

The ball came back to Dewitt at exactly the right spot and traveled exceedingly fast. It would be hard to pick out any one of the Princeton back field and say that he outshone the others.

Coristie, Vaughan, Pendleton, Baker and Dewitt—all played a magnificent game. Always reliable, watchful, drawing upon all [illegible] resources in their offensive and defensive game. Smith at right end for Harvard played his usual reliable game. He and O'Brien were down on the kicks well and only on one occasion did Pendleton get loose for a return run, and then the fleet Tiger halfback was stopped after he had made 15 yards.

Huntington at fullback was a tower of strength in supporting his line, he also recovered an on-side kick by cleverly following the ball which put Harvard within easy striking distance of the Tiger's nest, but Mr. Punch wasn't there.

Wendell often made good substantial gains through the line when in mid-field, but the Tiger defence under the shadow of their goal posts so completely outplayed the Harvard line that he could not gain consistently at such times. The game was absolutely clean all the way through, and it is a feature that all football followers are glad to see.

WORCESTER, Nov. 4.—In a one-sided rough game, Springfield Training defeated Holy Cross on Fitton Field to-day, 12 to 0. The local players being unable to hold the visitors, who made big holes in the Purple ranks. Mann, for the visitors in the first period after a hard fight got the pigskin and carried it from Springfield's 15-yard line over all Holy Cross territory for a touchdown, with Meiner kicking the goal. Harvard 2nd Dazzled By Exeter, Beaten in First Three Minutes

In a game replete with sensational end runs and forward passes, Exeter Academy defeated Harvard 2d at the Harvard Stadium yesterday afternoon. A seventy-yard run by Dickerman, the Exeter quarter, around the Harvard right end in the first three minutes of play is mainly responsible for the Crimson defeat.

Discouraged by the quick Exeter score, and disconcerted by the variety of plays uncorked by the Academy boys, the Crimson team was literally swept off their feet. All three Exeter touchdowns were scored in the first half. Hurd, the Exeter fullback, kicked three goals.

The second touchdown for the Exeter boys resulted from two perfectly executed forward passes, Brown, the Exeter right end, carrying the ball over the Crimson goal.

A blocked kick which bounded back over the Harvard goal and was smothered by McDouglass, the Exeter left end, was responsible for the third touchdown.

Although outplayed and outlucked in the first two periods of play, the Crimson warriors "came back" in the third period and played the Exeter boys off their feet. In this period, with the ball on their own 15-yard line, Harvard had their only chance for a score, but the Exeter line tightened and, after two futile attempts, McCall, for the Crimson, was forced to attempt a drop kick which flew wide of the mark.

The game was hard fought and bitterly contested throughout. After the first half Harvard played good football, but at critical moments the Exeter line was impenetrable. At times the Crimson line was very weak, the Exeter forwards sifting through and on several occasions narrowly failing to block the Harvard punter.

Hurd, the Exeter fullback, and Dickinson, the quarterback, were conspicuous. Hurd hit the line low and hard and made a number of good gains. Dickinson used excellent judgment in selecting plays for the Exeter attack.

THE LINEUP.

DARTMOUTH BEATS AMHERST, 18 TO 6

Straight Rush Plays Result in Two of Its Touchdowns.

AMHERST, Nov. 4.—Dartmouth defeated Amherst to-day, 18 to 6, in a game well fought on both sides. The Massachusetts players played straight football. Their men seemed better able to keep their feet when tackled. Amherst's tackling was often inaccurate and futile, while the men of the Green were sure and strong at dropping their opponents. Madden's work for Amherst was, however, excellent.

For Dartmouth Engleborn, Elcock and Daley did fine work on the line. Miles was fast and quick at picking his openings. Amherst secured their one score by Guetter's blocking a punt and running unhindered down the field. Two of Dartmouth's touchdowns were the result of straight rush plays, the other of the blocking of a kick near the goal line.

Play ended on Dartmouth's 41 yards, the ball theirs. In the last quarter McCay was sent off the field for illegal use of the hands and Whiteman took his place. Amherst was penalized 40 yards at the same time. No further score was made and both teams waged battle up and down the field, with the advantage on Dartmouth side. Summary:

LONE SAFETY WINS FOR WALTHAM HIGH

Defeats Newton High in Second Period During a Rough Game.

WALTHAM, Nov 4.—For the third consecutive time Waltham High defeated its old-time rival, Newton High, yesterday afternoon. A single safety made at the opening of the second period was the only score of the whole game. Score 2 to 0.

Rough playing marked the game. As the result of a blow on the head in a scrimmage, Norman Clark, Newton centre, was sent unconscious to the Waltham Hospital with concussion of the brain. He regained his senses a short time after his arrival at the hospital and was sent home.

Waltham's tally came at the very opening of the second period following a try for a field goal by Fagan. The attempt failed and Lyall was tried to catch the sphere, fumbled. Tucker recovered the ball, was tackled by Moody before he could get out from behind the goal line. [illegible]

What looked like a sure touchdown for Newton came in the same period when Blue took a forward pass from Whitton and wormed his way out of the arms of three Waltham tacklers. He started off with only [illegible] between him and a touchdown. But the little Waltham quarterback was equal to the task and downed him on Waltham's 25-yard line.

CAMERON FARMED OUT.

Connie Mack Thinks Detroit Boy Is a Comer.

Scotty Cameron, the Detroit boy who [illegible] the Western Ontario League last [illegible] was drafted by Connie Mack, has been farmed out to the Baltimore Eastern League by the Athletics. Mack is of the opinion that the Detroiter has the makings of a great player, but that he needs another year or so of work in the minors.

Lakewood Golf Tourney.

The annual Lakewood three-day meeting will begin Thursday with the 18-hole qualification round. Noted players from the Massachusetts, Philadelphia and Metropolitan golfing districts will be on hand.

Another open event is the last of the Massachusetts golfing season, a mixed foursome tourney at the Oakley Country Club in Belmont.

All the men and women golfers members of clubs belonging to the Boston Women's Golf Association or the Massachusetts Golf Association are eligible to play.

Three Golf Prizes Won.

All of the members of the Albemarle Golf Club who had not previously won a prize during the Fall season at this club were eligible for the match play which started for a Fall handicap cup yesterday. The best match was between C. E. Stearns and H. F. Beal, the former winning out by one up at the last hole. W. H. Boyd and G. H. Adams were other players to win.

CRACK BOWLERS TO BATTLE FOR TITLE

Ten Star Candlepin Smashers In World Entered In Championship Tournament.

By ED COGSWELL.

It looks like Charley Symonds of Lynn has solved the problem of finding the champion candlepin bowler of the world in [illegible] tournament which will open just as soon as the entry of John Christopher can be received, he now being away from Boston on a business trip.

[illegible] already entered comprise [illegible] the best bowlers at candlepins wherever the game is played: Poeb[illegible], Galway, Martel, Warren Brown, Jack [illegible]

It is likely that the schedule will be arranged [illegible] any start [illegible] a week or so. Without Christopher, one of the most important factors in the sport would be missing. It is for this reason alone that the delay is being made [illegible] his return to the Hub.

It is very doubtful if the wisest bowling expert can dope out the victor. Naturally the top liners in the betting will be Paul Poehler, the strongest straight-ball artist who ever threw a ball, [illegible] as the man with the iron nerve in a pinch, Warren Brown, with his famous jump ball that is fatal to the pins when working right; John Christopher, the marvel at overcoming half and full worces ters for clean-ups.

These appear the best in going through the list, but none can afford to overlook the remainder. Bowling luck has to be seriously considered, but the winner, notwithstanding this fact, must be crowned the KING—champion of all candlepin manipulators.

Perhaps there will be nothing doing at the Carruth alleys next Wednesday night, when the Adams Square five travel down there to fight it out for first place in the Boston City League, but it is a cinch that Chester Carruth will have his hands full in entertaining all who will crowd into his gallery and floor space reserved for the spectators and rooters for each of the teams.

The Quarterback

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

Copyright, 1911, by the National News Association

THE quarterback is agile, the quarterback is small;
He squats behind the heavyweights and isn't seen at all;
But when it comes to tackling on a stern and frost-bound field,
Quarterbacks have up-ended guards, the while their sense reeled. (RHYME FOR FIELD.)

CHORUS:

So here's to the game little quarterback,
He's doing the best he can,
On account of his size they don't black up his eyes,
But he's every inch a man.
He knows it is hard to be hit by a guard,
Because he's so light and so graceful,
But he knows he can land, with foot or with hand,
Till with loose teeth a guard has a face full.

Yes, the quarterback is agile, the quarterback is small;
He couldn't move pianos and he couldn't fight at all.
But the quarterback can sting, boys, like a busy little bee,
If you watch him you will catch him using elbow, fist and knee.

SAME CHORUS WITH MORE ROUGH STUFF.

Blind Youths Have Two Speedy Elevens at Kentucky School

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Oct. 28.—The regular football team at the Kentucky Institute for blind boys has a rival in the field this season made up of the boy scouts from the institute. The latter team started off with a victory over one of the local teams, and the boys were very much elated over their success. The team that they won from was of equal weight and not handicapped by loss of sight.

To watch the young blind boys perform is a treat. They get off the plays, tackle, and get off long runs as if they had their sight. Of the eleven men on the team, four of them have a dim vision of light. They can just about sight a player and that is all.

The teams play on equal grounds except for one favor that the blind youngsters ask of the boys with perfect sight, and that is when they are going to pull off a play to shout "Pass." The rest is easy for them. The blind youngsters then trust to their superior sense of sound and touch. The only way the blind youngsters can tell what is going around them is by the sense of hearing. There is one rule that the sightless lads always break, and that is holding a player after the ball is downed. Many of them hold their opponent for several minutes. In their opening game the blind lads showed themselves to be equal in every way to their opponents with perfect sight.

INTERNATIONAL AND NATIONAL CONTESTS NEXT IN ORDER

Greatest Long-Distance Motor Racing Carnival in the History of the Sport to Be Witnessed in the South.

By J. C. KERRISON.

The greatest long distance racing carnival that has ever been held in the history of motoring is that which is scheduled for Savannah from November 27 to 30. This meet undoubtedly will be known in history as the most sensational of all speed carnivals.

While it is a fact that in years past both Europe and America have held race carnivals of many days' duration, there has never been one in which four long distance races of the very highest order, recognized as among the blue ribbon events, has ever been held at one and the same meet.

Savannah will this year show to the world at large what it is possible to accomplish in the needs of hard, energetic and consistant work on the part of her automobile association. Two of the most famous classics of the world—the Vanderbilt Cup and the Grand Prize races are the leaders of the four. The latter is recognized and is in fact the biggest international event of the year, and while the Vanderbilt race this year more than ever partakes of an international character, it is not given the standing that is awarded the Grand Prize.

The Grand Prize is considered the purse de resistance of the meet, and will be held on Thanksgiving Day. The distance is to be 408 miles, and it will be one of the fastest speed exhibitions on earth, when American cars will meet the best efforts of the foreigners, in an endeavor to bring the gold cup back to the land of its birth. In addition to the handsome cup there is a purse of gold dollars.

[illegible] Vanderbilt Cup—Three Flats, Abbott-Detroit, Hoffer Marmon and Mercedes—two cars each.

Thelman Trophy—Three Studebaker-Flanders and two Abbott Detroits.

Savannah Challenge Trophy—Three Marmons, Abbott Detroit Cose, Mercer and Crow, two cars each.

[illegible] The entries for the contest do not close until the fifteenth day of the month, when it is expected that four total entry list will be [illegible] with a number of the [illegible] that have entered in the [illegible] contests.

[illegible] Many of the cars are already taking [illegible] Savannah. [illegible] Flats have been [illegible] for the South on the steamer [illegible] of November 1.

It is also the intention of the Flat [illegible] to [illegible] their cars to the [illegible] Looks [illegible] Grand Prize [illegible] Bruce-Brown [illegible] Lewis Strang [illegible] Vanderbilt Cup [illegible] on November 27. Driver [illegible] Flat [illegible] Bruce-Brown will go South [illegible] Strang will go South [illegible] Wagner will arrive from Europe next week and proceed to Savannah at once. Teddy Tetzlaff will go direct to Savannah from his home at Los Angeles, Cal.

Ralph De Palma will have one of the 90 h. p. Mercedes mounts and Spencer K. Wishart the other.

The definite decision of the Lozier Company to enter four cars—a pair in both Vanderbilt and Grand Prize—with Mulford and Grant piloting is welcome news. The Benz cars, which ran second in the Grand Prize will be driven by Burman and Heuery. Disbrow will have the Pope "Hummer" with which he broke so many world's straightaway records last Winter. This is to be entered in the Vanderbilt only.

The interest in this big carnival is by no means confined to any one particular section, but extends over Europe and America, and it will be productive of record work is conceded.

KEEPING OFF THE RAIN.

Method of Treating Wind Shield Against a Shower.

What is the best method of keeping rain off the wind screen? The obstructing of the view by rain on the wind screen is one of the principal objections to this fitting, and while glycerine, vaseline, or soap may be used to prevent water clinging to the glass, it is only a matter of time before these palliatives are washed off. The screen in which the lower half can be tilted back so as to allow the driver to look over it, while the angle at which it is set throws the air currents over the head, is undoubtedly the best all-weather screen. Protection against a shower, however, is given by wiping over the glass with a little vaseline, mixed with glycerine. Vaseline may be applied in the same way or soap may be rubbed on the glass polished. The effect of all these is the same: to prevent a film forming, while the drops of rain at once run down, instead of clinging and spreading into one another. If glycerine or vaseline is applied too liberally, especially if experienced with dust sticking to the screen, floggins may, of course, be treated in the same manner.

Rambler in Hard Test.

Thirty five hundred miles over the worst roads of a dozen States, in the worst weather this country has known in years, encountering thunder storms and washouts every day, was the test given the first Rambler Cross Country, the new car which returned to Chicago Thursday after being on the road almost constantly for thirty days.

The car left the Rambler factory a month ago, and was relayed by Rambler representatives from Kenosha to Chicago, Toledo, Pittsburg, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Albany, Syracuse, Penn Yan, Rochester, and return.

The rains began late in September and continued from about October, and by the time they flooded the banks, washing out bridges and filling the Pennsylvania mountain valleys with pushing torrents.

The Rambler went through without a hitch and without a repair, finishing up at the Chicago branch with the engine running better than when the car left the factory.

GOVERNOR WILL APPOINT CHAIRMAN

Automobile Men Foster Candidacy of W. E. McClintock, Former Commissioner.

The selection of a member of the Highway Commission [illegible] vacancy caused by the retirement of Chairman Harold D. Parker on Wednesday last will be announced soon be made by Governor Foss. There are many candidates mentioned for the place, some of whom are known to the motorists at large and others who are more favorably and popularly known in the world of politics.

As chairman of the Highway Commission, Harold D. Parker did much toward placing the State in the forefront, and his work was of such a character as to gain for him the kind and liberal [illegible] praise, confidence and respect of the motoring public and of commissioners of the entire country.

In casting about for a successor to Mr. Parker, the motorists at large very naturally turn towards W. E. McClintock, who retired from the commission to accept the chairmanship of the Public Service Commission. Mr. McClintock's term on that board will expire very soon, and it is expected that the State [illegible] not do any better [illegible] than to [illegible] reappointment of [illegible] which he was a member in the very first year of its creation.

Mr. McClintock is admittedly familiar with the methods of road construction, being a practical road engineer, and is familiar with the workings of the commission, not only as regards the construction and maintenance of the highways, but by reason of the automobile laws of the commonwealth.

It is said that he has been put forth as a candidate for the position by the representative automobile men of the State.

THE VANDERBILT CUP

A Financial Success.

Philadelphia charitable institutions will benefit from the Fairmount Park 200-mile automobile race recently run there to the amount of $8,036.57, the net proceeds of the meet. There is a possibility that there will be no more road races at the park. At a recent meeting of the Fairmount Park Commission, Dr. J. William White of the University of Pennsylvania submitted a resolution calling for the abolishment of automobile races. Action in this matter is awaited with interest by automobilists.

FORD SMASHING RECORDS AGAIN

Automobile Business, if Reflected in Model "T" Success, Is Booming.

DETROIT, Nov. 4—Following its announcement of 78,000 Ford Model T cars for 1912, the Ford Motor Company has started breaking records for automobile production. Close to 4,000 Ford cars were made and sold in October. That is the largest business ever known for October in the annals of the motor car industry.

It is practically certain that every succeeding month will show an enormous increase in Ford production over the corresponding month a year ago. There are two reasons for that. One is the big reduction in the price of Ford Model T cars, and the other is the unusually healthy state of the motor car business in general.

It is even anticipated that the Ford record of making and selling 8,013 Model "T" cars last May will be beaten before the Winter is over, which many regard as the dull season. On account of the tremendous foreign trade which the Ford Motor Company enjoys and the wide distribution of Ford cars in the South, the Winter months are far from dull at the Ford plant, though they are not as brisk as in the Spring.

Battery upon battery of new machines have been installed in the Ford factory for the increased production. Automatic gear cutters of the very latest Lozier pattern have been added in large numbers, while special machinery, suggested and designed by Henry Ford, is being put in steadily.

MILLION DOLLARS TAKEN IN RISKS

Six Automobile Officials Carry That Amount of Accident Insurance on Trip.

One million dollars of accident insurance was the amount placed on the lives of six officials of the Willys-Overland company during a recent three days' trip from Toledo, Ohio, to Elmira, N. Y., and return, when President John N. Willys was the guest of honor at a banquet tendered him by the Elmira Business Men's Association.

This is by far the heaviest amount of accident insurance ever taken out for a like purpose by an automobile concern, say the insurance companies, and never has that amount been placed on six men in or out of the automobile for such a short duration of time.

Before the party left Toledo President John N. Willys exercised his usual keenness of foresthought and placed the million dollars on his chief lieutenants. Fourteen companies took the risk.

Advancement for Hall.

Mr. J. S. Hall, for five years manager of the service department of the Eastern district branch of the Lozier Motor Company in Newark, N. J., has been appointed to the position of manager of the service department of the Lozier Motor Company, Detroit, Mich.

COMPLETE PLANS FOR BIG SMOKER

Members of Bay State Association Will Gather Monday Evening for Discussion.

The smoker of the Bay State Automobile Association, to be held in the palm room of the Hotel Lenox on Monday evening, will unquestionably prove to be the event of the early Winter social season. The committee in charge of the smoker has set forth its best endeavors to furnish a program that will be particularly [illegible] to the members at large, and according to the chairman of the committee those who fail to attend the same will always regret it.

The committee is making still further plans for the holding of the annual dinner at which it is hoped Governor Foss, Mayor Fitzgerald, a member of the Highway Commission, and last, but not least, Harry Chalmers, will be the chief speakers.

Peerless Cars.

The Peerless Motor Car Company of New England are offering for sale a few cars of their own make which have been used one or two seasons, and thorough overhauled in their own shops, when they have the most complete facilities for this kind of work. After being in perfect mechanical condition the cars are repainted and polished, and can hardly be distinguished from new cars. They are sold with the regular factory guarantee

This Tire Outsells All Others

After 700,000 Have Been Tested Out

When you come to choose tires, remember this: Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires—our patented type—have become the most popular tires in existence.

In the past two years—through sheer force of merit—the demand has increased by 500 per cent.

All because these tires, with tens of thousands of users, have actually cut tire bills in two.

Think what folly it is to choose tires blindly, without learning what others know.

A Double-Thick Non-Skid

Now these tires which can't rim-cut—these oversize tires—come equipped, if you wish, with a double-thick Non-Skid tread.

Just compare this tread with the makeshifts called "non-skids." Compare it with the flimsy, short-lived projections made to do away with chains.

Here is an extra tread, about as thick as our regular, which is vulcanized onto the regular tire. That means a double-thick tread.

This extra tread is of very tough rubber. It is as thick that the bars are cut deep. One doesn't soon wear them out.

Each block widens out at the base, so the strain is distributed over just as much surface as with smooth-tread tires.

We have worked for three years in perfecting this tread. Now we ask you to find it out. It is at least twice as efficient as the best other non-skid.

No-Rim-Cut Tires 10% Oversize

This tread, if wanted, comes on Goodyear No-Rim-Cut tires.

These are the tires which can't rim-cut. Out of 700,000 which we have sold there has never been an instance of rim-cutting.

These are the tires which don't hook to the rims—the easiest tires to remove which were ever created.

These are the tires which are 10% over the rated size. That means 10% more air—10% greater carrying capacity. And that, with the average car, adds 25% to the tire mileage.

These two features together—No-Rim-Cut and oversize—cut half from one's tire bills under average conditions. Yet these patented tires now cost no more than other standard tires. And they fit any standard rim.

Figure out for yourself if it pays to buy tires which lack these desirable features.

Yet the automobiles went through from New York to Pittsburg via Buffalo [illegible] business.

AN AUTHORITY ON MOTOR TRUCKS

Thoroughly Convinced That in the Near Future Motor Truck Will Be In General Use.

No man in the motor truck industry today has given greater consideration to the matter of motor trucks from the standpoint of the user than has Mr. L. B. Butler, head of the Butler Motor Truck Company of New England, distributors of the [illegible] Rapid trucks.

Mr. Butler might properly be considered as the pioneer truck man in New England, and his company being the oldest exclusive motor truck representative in New England. Raymond & Whitcomb Motor Tourists Have Been on the Roads Five Weeks.

SANTA FE, N. M., Nov. 4.—Five weeks out of New York and with more than 2,800 miles of the "Trail to Sunset" behind them the transcontinental tourists reached this, the second oldest town in the United States, early this afternoon and after the usual Sunday rest will resume their journey to Los Angeles on Monday morning.

Their arrival here marks the end of the most interesting week of their entire journey so far, and here they will leave the Santa Fe trail, which they have followed its full length of almost [illegible] miles, having left Kansas City on Tuesday of last week and been on the road nine days since that day.

SOUTHERN TOURING MOST POPULAR

Great Demand for Motor Routes Through the Southern Section of the United States.

A constantly increasing demand for touring routes through the South and Southwestern States is a marked feature of the approaching Winter season. There has been practically no diminution in touring popularity since early Summer and all indications point to an exceptionally active season during the Fall and Winter periods. Less than half a dozen years ago fully 90 per cent. of the automobiles were put in storage in October—to-day just the reverse is true—the majority being kept in running order throughout the year.

Touring to all of the leading Southern resorts has increased within the last two years and a great impetus to California touring from the Eastern States has been given since the successful mapping of the "Trail to Sunset" by the Touring Club of America over a year ago. The Touring Club's official scout, Thomas W. Wilby, is now homeward bound finishing the return trip of his double transcontinental tour and has succeeded in interesting the Governors and highway engineers of many of the States hitherto little frequented by motorists so that substantial road improvements are now projected for a [illegible] of miles on the highway from the East to Los Angeles and other resorts in Southern California.

One of the important results of this scouting trip will be the prominence given to this transcontinental highway at the forthcoming tri-State conference between the Governors of California, Arizona and New Mexico. [illegible]

Another official scouting party of the Touring Club of America started from Atlanta October 31, traversing the [illegible] from Atlanta to Richmond via Augusta [illegible] Richmond November 4. This route will be followed by Southern motorists [illegible] to attend the first American road congress to be held at Richmond, Va., November 20-24, under the direction of the American Association for Highway Improvement. Road users day which will be conducted by the Touring Club of America on November 22 will be a great feature of this congress and scores of prominent motorists are planning tours to Richmond from many cities throughout the country, especially in the South.

Nowadays thousands of persons visit automobile shows without the intention of purchasing a new car. These are not mere curiosity seekers, but simply motorists now owning cars who wish to see all that is new in accessory ideas, for every man who ever has owned a car has had to spend his bright pennies for new accessories upon many occasions. If one is thoroughly interested in the subject of finding better designed or better quality accessories and supplies, the show in the garden is obviously the place to work most advantageously.

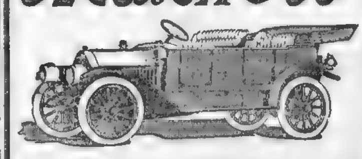
"Maxwell"



Mr. Prospective Buyer!

Have you examined the Maxwell 1912 models? Have you noted the many refinements, including Columbia Type Radiator, Full Float Rear Axle, Commodious Body? Are you informed as to the absolute dependability of Maxwell Cars? 93% of all Maxwell cars registered in New England in 1905 were still registered in 1911. 91% of all Maxwell cars registered in New York in 1905 were still registered in 1911. The Maxwell is not a one-year car.

Have you read the reports on the Glidden Tour, the most strenuous road contest ever run? There were seventy-three cars entered, some costing as high as $5000. The Maxwell was the only team to finish with a perfect score.

Governor Hoke Smith of Georgia also drove a Maxwell which was awarded the Anderson Trophy for the best individual car score: his score being perfect for the entire run.

Note what Mr. Charles J. Glidden says of the Maxwell in the Boston Globe, Oct. 29, 1911.

"Naturally the winning cars are uppermost in the minds of every one, and so I shall start with the Maxwell team. Frankly I must say that I am not surprised that it should win the trophy. When the Glidden Trophy was first competed for in 1905 J. D. Maxwell was an entrant. He had a small car, but the consistency with which he brought it through each day brought him to my attention, so that I remarked at the time that in the future whatever he built would make good. It was bred in the man and there was every evidence of thoroughness in his actions. So the Maxwell cars of today are a prototype of their designer, strong, reliable and a credit to him."

We are prepared to show and demonstrate all Maxwell models, and will greatly appreciate an opportunity to do so

What're You Going to Do About It?

By T. E. POWERS, the Famous Cartoonist.

Our Correspondence School—How to Get Away With It

If we are not found out, that does not signify success, but to "get away with it" maintains the secret and adds success, whether it be a mining scheme, a bluff at ancestry, an affair of the heart, or a political deal.

The importance, then, of this course in our celebrated correspondence school of "getting away with it" cannot be overestimated

Copyright, 1911, by American Journal Examiner. Great Britain Rights Reserved.

IF A couple of husky minions of the law find you travelling about the country with a charming lady, and they drag you back to meet your wife, do not lose courage. Maintain that you do not know your wife—that your name is something else—that your mind is a blank. Gradually recover your mind. Tell your wife there is something familiar about her. Say, "Where am I?" about a dozen times, and the papers will print entertaining stories of how your mind became a blank and how you wandered away. When they tell you what you have done, indignantly deny it, and begin to talk of the events that occurred when you went away, just as though they had occurred yesterday.

They all get away with it.

IF You are clumsy at the Charity Ball and step on Mrs. Vander-Bunk Leeder's $1,000 ball gown, tearing $486 worth of material out of the train, do not flee in dismay, but, placing your hand over your heart, bow low and say, smilingly, "My DEAR Mrs. Leeder, I was so enraptured with the beauty of your girlish face that I was blinded to all else about me. Really, you owe me an apology for being so beautiful and thereby distracting me to such an embarrassing extent." The old hen will giggle and pat you fondly on the cheek, and forever after she will be your friend.

With that line of dope they all get away with it.

IF You have been telling your new acquaintances that you are worth fifty million dollars, and they begin to doubt it, always tip the waiters five cents, always roast the laboring classes, always talk about divine rights and peace and contentment and good cheer, always tell about reducing salaries in your offices, and then these acquaintances will be convinced you are indeed a multi-millionaire. Next, borrow a large sum.

You can get away with it.

IF A car window or door pinches your finger, or bumps your knee, or jolts you suddenly, use a pair of crutches, bandage yourself up and slop arnica and iodoform and stuff over you, stay around the house a month, get a doctor's certificate to the effect that you are permanently injured, and soak the corporation for $100,000. They will settle for $50,000, or the courts will award you $49,599.

They always get away with it.

IF You sell stock in a great mine until you have acquired half a million or so, and the shareholders begin to get astigmatism looking for dividends, rush out to the country, where your mine is supposed to be located, buy a couple acres of ground, dig a big hole in it, erect a shanty, equip the hole with two shovels and a pick and let the angry shareholders see. A hole in the ground and some digging utensils constitute a perfectly good mine in the eyes of the law. The shareholders must blame nature, not you, if it is found there is no deposit of mineral in the mine. Surely they cannot hold you responsible for the erratic conditions of the earth, and you get away with it.

IF Your son asks you how much three times $256,276, multiplied by $2,736, divided by 99½, would bring in fifty-one years at compound interest, look sternly at him and say, "My son, these problems are only learned by working them out. To tell you would be an injustice to you, as the lessons would do you no good. At your age I was doing problems in algebra and cube root."

You can always get away with it.

IF You drink out of the finger bowl at a banquet under the impression it is lemonade, and note the shocked expressions, calmly take out a little note book, dot down a memorandum and remark, "Here's where I win that touring car from Van Noodle. He bet me I dare not do that at this banquet."

"Good nerve," "Isn't he droll?" and "How jolly eccentric, what a good sport!" will be the expressions on every hand, and you will therefore get away with it.

IF You want a valuable franchise, prepare a little pamphlet for the public explaining what a great public benefactor your plan will make you. Describe how it is solely for the public good. Then get next to the political machine and have your agent hand over some perfectly good stacks of bank notes. Checks are too dangerous. Right there is where both the political machine and yourself get away with it.

IF Your wife has been getting your pay envelope each week, unopened, has always counted it and found the sum correct and has always handed you out $2.50 for fares and luncheons, and if she suddenly discovers that your salary has been twenty dollars per week more than she thought it was, and that you have been slipping the money you handed her into a new envelope and holding out the twenty, all in addition to the $2.50 she handed back to you—why, if she finds this out, you should either beat it for New Zealand, or lie right down and die. Unless you adopt the latter method, however, no chances are

You can't get away with it.

RAYMOND—Hello, Julius Linzberg, how is it by you?
CAVERLY—Not so good, Holzman.
RAYMOND—Whoo is der reason?
CAVERLY—I ran for Alderman in my ward last week
RAYMOND—Did you win?
CAVERLY—No; my oppositioner was a bald-headed man, but he won by a hair
RAYMOND—Do you believe in dreams?
CAVERLY—I used to, but not now
RAYMOND—Why, Julius?
CAVERLY—I met one about five years ago and I married her. I bear Astor gave his bride a million dollars.
RAYMOND—For dat much money I'd marry Carrie Nation, if she wasn't dead yet
CAVERLY—You know every husband ought to make his bride an allowance from the start.
RAYMOND—Why, Julius?
CAVERLY—Because from the start every bride finds that she must constantly make allowances for her husband
RAYMOND—Julius, I'm going to send my boy Heinie to college for an education. Soon he will be a colleger boy
CAVERLY—To be a college boy all he needs is funny clothes.
RAYMOND—Did you hear about my boy Ludwig?
CAVERLY—How could I?

RAYMOND—He vent away from home last month, and to-day I got a letter from him and he says in it he has a fine job in a circus.
CAVERLY—What is he doing in a circus?
RAYMOND—He states in the letter that he is an aviation.
CAVERLY—What is an aviation?
RAYMOND—I don't know. He says he dives through doughnuts without puncturing the air.
CAVERLY—If he ever eats the doughnuts he looses his job.
RAYMOND—In his letter he says the dorfaced boy vants to marry the bearded lady.
CAVERLY—They won't have to get a marriage license; a dog's license will do.
RAYMOND—He is so much in love with her that he barks at any one who comes near her.
CAVERLY—They should live cheap after marriage All she will have to feed him on will be dog biscuits
RAYMOND—Did you know I used to be with a circus once, when I vas a boy?
CAVERLY—You surprise me with astonishment
RAYMOND—Sure! I used to eat glass, broken bottles and window panes. I vas known as the human pain destroyer
CAVERLY—Is it possible
RAYMOND—Sure
CAVERLY—How did you get that way?
RAYMOND—Once I stopped a whole week in a boarding house in New Bedford
CAVERLY—Any one who can stop at a boarding house in New Bedford a whole week can eat anything.
RAYMOND—Ain't dot vonderful about people flying in the air? Look at Atwood; he flew from town to town. He is a hero
CAVERLY—What is a hero?
RAYMOND—A hero is a man what does something grand, something wonderful. For instance, Woodrow Wilson is a hero because he is going to run for President.
CAVERLY—What hero is there to that?
RAYMOND—Why, any one who runs for President on the Democrat ticket is a hero.
CAVERLY—Who elects the Presidents of this country?
RAYMOND—Insurance and trust companies.
CAVERLY—I thought Charlie Murphy did it.
RAYMOND—The Town I live in is up to date. The ladies are always planning some new schemes at parties
CAVERLY—What are they, hen parties?
RAYMOND—Yes; but they use no foul language.
CAVERLY—Are there any broilers among them?
RAYMOND—There isn't a broiler in the town Last week they gave a white elephant party, and each guest was requested to bring something she could not find any use for and yet too good to throw away
CAVERLY—Was the party a success?
RAYMOND—Vell, it would have been, only for an accident which broke it up
CAVERLY—How vas that?
RAYMOND—Vhy, fourteen of the nineteen women brought their husbands
CAVERLY—Say, Julius, I got a "daffy pill."
RAYMOND—Vhat is it?
CAVERLY—If Boston had an earthquake would the Parker House Roll?
RAYMOND—Vhy are some theatrical managers turning their theatres into moving picture houses?
CAVERLY—Vhy?
RAYMOND—Because they vant to film

Funny Stories Told by Wilson Mizner on Broadway

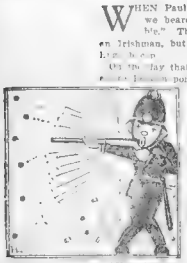
WHEN Paul Armstrong and I were in England we heard a funny one on an English "bobbie." The hero of this yarn happened to be an Irishman, but he was holding down the job of an English bobby.

On the day that the band of anarchists stood off the entire London police force, our hero, whose name was Higgins, was rushed to the seat of the trouble with the rest of the riot squad. He tripped over his rifle a dozen times while on the way, but finally reached the scene of disorder, promptly hunted out a big doorway for himself, closed his eyes, and started to pump away with his repeating rifle.



He was entirely enveloped in smoke when the captain of his squad discovered him blazing away to his heart's content

"For the love of heavens, Higgins, where are you aiming?" he yelled above the roar of the gun.

"Divil a bit do OI know; the bullets are LEAVING here awl roight."

WE had a fire company in Nome when the gold hunters began to come in that was a volunteer affair. A lot of the boys chipped in and we got a little expense fund together, and one of the company was made treasurer.

One cold morning some one came running into the principal saloon and announced in startled tones that "Bob," the treasurer of the Nome Hook and Ladder Company, had skipped the town with all the fire funds. We formed a posse and took up the "Bob" trail.

For three days we kept hot after him, and finally he was picked off with a dozen rifle bullets as he was trying to slide down a ravine. "Bob" died with his fire boots on right then and there.

We held a little council of war and decided that we wouldn't leave a dog to his fate out there, so it was agreed that we would bring "Bob's" body into camp and give him a regular send off. He'd been our best fire-fighter, and besides we had recovered the money, so we let it go at that.

The whole town turned out to pay respects to a good fireman, but a bad treasurer. The barber made a speech, the first saloon-keeper of the town read an original poem, and then I was asked to say a few words. Reluctantly, I arose, and in a voice that sounded like a wail from the tomb to that shaggy crowd, I said.

"Poor—poor 'Bob!' Gone to his last fire!"

THERE was tremendous excitement when the miners in Nome took up a collection to send me down to Seattle to import a soubrette for the Nome Grand Opera House. The boys saw me off and I was especially importuned to bring back a lady of "class." She must be a lady that could sing and dance, but above all she must have plenty of "class."

I made the rounds of the smaller vaudeville houses and finally saw a dancer that I thought would suit. I made her the offer and she accepted the terms of the "Nome Grand Opera and Vaudeville Company." It was new up to me to discover her limits when it came to "class."

I suggested a little supper after the show. She accepted, and I took her to a pretty swell lobster palace. She had come along in all her paint and paste diamonds. She got along fairly well until I asked her if she'd have some anchovies.

"What's them?" she asked

"Fish," I explained.

"Well, I guess I don't care for none. I don't know much about fishes, anyway. You know, I'm from the inland."

From the inland! And a poor anchovy that has never been out of a barrel in his life! They get them from the top of the Rocky Mountains, somewhere.

But I was "class" hunting, so I asked:

"Is there anything else you'd like?" In her best concert hall squeak she said:

"Let me see; oh, yes! I'll have a pot of demi tasses!"

I tore her contract with the N. G. O. and V. Co. right out of her hand. She had spilled the "class."

A FEW seasons ago, Maurice Barrymore went to England to be leading man for Modjeska, the great Polish actress. Barrymore, always notoriously bad when it came to remembering his lines, simply couldn't get the ones in this new play.

On the opening night he required twice as much prompting as the great star opposite him. After the curtain went down on the last act Modjeska made a rush for Barrymore, who was already headed for his dressing room. Modjeska called to him:

"Meester—you—you—you alone—you leetle thing!

They write the play for me, see great Modjeska, meesee artiest—and you tiny simpleton—you ruin everything—Oh! Oh!! Oh!!! Do you understand? You ruin the play written for me—see celebrated—you see tiny American—you bring disaster to me—Madame Modjeska—the PERSON!"

Barrymore had listened to this tirade without flinching. When Modjeska had had her say, Barrymore straightened up and in a calm voice said:

"My dear Madame Modjeska, I was a matinee idol in London and America before people knew whether the name Modjeska stood for an actress or a tooth wash!"

AFTER a wonderfully successful run with his play, "Salomy Jane," in New York, Armstrong decided to make a run up to Winnipeg with an extra "Salomy Jane" company, just to see how the natives would take his offering. The Winnipeg Opera House was well filled on the opening night and Armstrong was agreeably surprised over the warm reception accorded the company and his play.

It was with eager fingers he turned to the dramatic page of the local paper the next morning at breakfast to see what the foremost Winnipeg critic had to say. He said it. There it was—in bold, black type:

"Paul Armstrong, a young American playwright, jumps from obscurity to fame in a single night."

Hangover—The Great Oshkosh Pitcher-Actor

By William F. Kirk.

CHAPTER III.
IN WHICH HAROLD HANGOVER DOUBLES WITH A HICK.

WITH the hisses and "boos" of an unsatisfied audience ringing in his ears, Harold Hangover, the great Oshkosh pitcher, strode [illegible] ed creed to the hay. Fearless as our hero ever was on the field of battle, he was but a boy, and the cruel ordeal of "the hook" had cut him more deeply than he cared to admit, even to his patient landlady waiting for him on the porch

"Well [illegible] asked the landlady, gazing at Harold Hangover with her pale blue New England eyes, "was your fake business a success? And do I get my rent?"

"Madame," replied Harold Hangover, clutching his last case note as his gaze drifted toward the Westering sun, "Madame I did not do so well as I expected, but I feel sure that time, which heals all griefs, will make my act in vaudeville a prodicious success. I feel that ere another fortnight my name will be writ large on the centrefield wall of the Hall of Fame."

"Don't what they all say!" snorted the landlady, "all what I want to know about now is whether I get my current rent or not."

"It is the same as in your purse now," retorted our hero, as he plodded up the steps to the humble suite of rooms that he had engaged so as to be near the centre of the theatrical district But notwithstanding his cheerful assurance regarding the rent, the great Oshkosh pitcher was blue, and as he let himself into his apartment and threw the key into a decanter with the beautiful control for which he was noted, he sank back into a partially cushioned chair with all the poise at his command, emitting a deep sigh at the same time, a sigh that he sought to stifle

His past life was sweeping before him like the pictures of a panorama, and he could recall, with more or less distinctness, the days of his glory as a high-class pitcher Reflecting bitterly that he could have made more then in one week than these fellow Thespians were making in four, he longed again for the green outfield, the beautifully laid out diamond, the crack of the bat and the smack of the ball in the catcher's glove. Again he sighed, as he moved his dresser over against the door, for Harold Hangover had a dollar with him and did not propose to lose it just as he was on the threshhold of fame and fortune.

Just then a low tap sounded at the door

"Come in!" bawled our hero, who had not as yet acquired the quieter and more genteel, "Come!"

As he spoke he rolled away the dresser

Into the suite of the great Oshkosh pitcher strode a tall, lean person attired in one of the loudest plaid creations ever seen on or off Broadway

"Is your name Hangover?" he inquired.

"It is," answered the great pitcher from Wisconsin, "and I might add that I am proud of my name."

"Here too, Bo, here too," said the stranger. "My name is Dick Morgan. There's just two of us in the act, me and Hattie. First I come in alone and do a cute little dance, which gives the gal a chance to slip into her swell wardrobe, and then when I make my getaway the gal sings one of them old ballads, called,

"'There's a Hole in Mother's Stocking, But Her Heart is Kind and True'

"That song don't go so very good, kid, but we got a lot of other swell junk in our trunk, and I was just figuring that if you joined our layout the three of us ought to get up a pretty swell sort of an act. The broad has another song, one of them dainty love things that starts, 'I Love You in the Morning, Let's Go to Lunch at Noon.'"

During the chatter just recorded, the eyes of Harold Hangover had been gradually assuming a pained expression.

"What makes you think that I wanted to join your act?" he asked, taking his last cigar from his pocket and nibbling it himself. "I never even heard of you"

"You just gotta join us, kid," said the intruder. "I give 'em the goods, kid, the goods; the real stuff Say, kid, we knock 'em off their chairs everywhere we play. It's a riot, a scream, a volcano, kid."

The great Oshkosh pitcher yawned and held the door open

"Good night, Mr. Morgan," he said, wearily "I will try your proposition for one week"

Kicking off his square-toed shoes, Harold Hangover dived into the feather mattress and was soon fast asleep.

(Harold again before the footlights next Sunday.)

Ah, dot Nathan is a good children A good, near or boy you never know in your life Every morning he give to der teacher an apple. Last Summer he give to every one in der class der measles

I like him for he must be good to his folks. All last night he kept yelling in his sleep, "Feed the kitty! Feed the kitty!"

All my children can play der piano. Ven dey play I want them to stop and ven they stop I want them to play. I don't know which I like der best

I haven't felt well lately. It's my wife. She's an awful bad cook. Ven we got married some one sent her a cook book for a wedding present I think it must have been either a doctor or an undertaker

Last night she made some cake, and I think she makes a mistake. I think dot instead of using baking powder she used cement

But der bad cooking has give me dispepsia. I go to der doctors—one tells me one thing and der other tell me another thing. I can't sleep. Half der night I sleep mit one eye open and half der night I sleep mit der other eye open I would giff der world for a two-eyed sleep!

I can't find two doctors to give me der same advices One said: "Drink hot water an hour before meals" I can't do dot. I could drink it only for ten minutes. I feel like a broken steam pipe

Another doctor said to try Turkish baths So I went up to der window and give der man a dollar

Den dey put me in a liddle cell and told me to take off everything. I took off everything but my beard Den dey shoved me in der steams room. Pretty soon my body began to cry mit de tears all over. I was melting so fast dot I thought I would have to be brought home in a bucket.

CHIMMIE WAS WISE.

"SAY, Chimmie, who's this Gabby de Lilies everybody's chinning about?"

"Oh, she's the fairy that started that Immanuel movement that the papers were full of 'bout six months ago."

A DIFFERENT KIND OF FRUIT.

A POLICEMAN was talking to a Swedish servant when another of her race passed by.

"She's a peach!" said the policeman, nodding toward the departing Swede

"She ban no peach, she ban Anna," said the girl.

THEY GO TOGETHER.

"My sheath gown is a dream,"
Said she her shape displaying.
When he said to her quite frankly,
"It fits a girl about seventy."

HE PLAYED IN THE BUSH LEAGUE.

FANO—Who made the first baseball run on record?

Rooto—The serpent, in the garden of Eden.

Fano—How do you make that out?

Rooto—Didn't he score on Eve's error?

A RARE SPECIMEN.

A ZOOLOGIST out in California claims that he has discovered a cook. He is reported to have found her in a little town near San Francisco.

Professor Hash, of the University of Domestic Art, thinks it is altogether unlikely that such a find has been made, and points to the fact that none of the species has been seen in this country for some time..

Doctor Ham-an, who has the Department of Biscuits and Bread in the Cooking School, is more credulous. It is quite probable, he says, that a real live cook, corresponding exactly, or almost exactly, with the species of the past, has been found.

We have written to the discoverer to submit his proofs to the Stewological Society, which will pass on them.

If a cook has really been captured it will create a great sensation. The vaudeville and moving picture men will immediately get busy

The cook is reported to be an ideal one—unmarried, does not keep a boarding house on the side, has no beaux, does not suffer with slippery fingers, does not sing, does not care for policemen, is on hand bright and early every morning, has no relatives, likes to wash her own dishes and is as docile as a bale of hay.

HE HAS A WIFE OF HIS OWN.

"MY wife is the most affectionate woman you ever saw."

"Indeed?"

"Yes; no matter at what hour, day or night, I happen to come home she always meets me at the door with a kiss."

"Pshaw! that's not affection; that's suspicion."

YES, ON THE CUSTOMER'S PART.

BARBER—I am using a new shaving soap. Most of the gentlemen who get shaved here say it's the best I ever had.

Customer—Well, that's merely a matter of taste.

HOW DID SHE LOOK?

And she had a pretty [illegible]

THE FEMALE OF THE SPECIES

BY BUDYARD SKIPPLING.

With apologies to Mr. Kipling's poem of the same name.

WHEN the much-delayed commuter disembarks from the last train.
With a stealthy step he ventures to his country home again—
With a stealthy step he ventures, and his face is drawn and pale,
For the female she-commuter is more deadly than the male

Man's timid heart is bursting with the things he dare not say,
For the woman that he's married to won't let him get away.
He would like to kick at breakfast, but he eats his doughnuts stale,
For the female of the species is a terror to the male

So it comes that Man, the coward, when he gathers to confer
With his fellow braves in council, does not leave a place for her—
For he knows that, if he did so, she would gather all his kale,
For the female of the species spends the money of the male.

And Man knows it! Knows moreover, that the Woman that God gave him
Will rare ile dickens with him, should he ever misbehave him—
With a rolling pin or baton she will rout him without fail,
For female of the species is a terror to the male.

FALL FASHION HINTS

THERE will be no change in calling cards this season. For this purpose, four aces are the best ever.

* * *

SHOE trees should be trimmed in the Fall, while the sap is running down. This will keep them from sprouting.

* * *

WOMEN will insist upon the latest thing in gloves, but will continue to give mere man the mitten, as in the past.

* * *

MEN who can afford the luxury of being well dressed will wear trousers
The balance of mankind will wear pants

MEN'S coats will be worn long
That is, they will be worn as long as it takes the wearer to save the price of a new one.

* * *

GARTERS have gone out of style
So long as the hosiery trust has a monopoly on stockings, there is no danger of their coming down.

* * *

WOMEN'S hats will not be trimmed as extensively as heretofore, but that is no evidence that the male sex will not be trimmed as usual when the bills come in.

What Seldum Seezit {A Mere Man But / A Marvelous Detective} Did to Some Women Voters

Showing That Astute Detective's Wonderful Insight Into Woman's Complicated Nature—An Insight Not Inherited, But Acquired Through Sad Experience.

CHAPTER I.

"YOUR fame has traveled to our proud city, Mr. Seezit"—— began the visitor, when the famous detective interrupted him.

"What do you expect me to do—advance railroad fare to bring my fame back?" asked Seldum Seezit.

"No, indeed," said the visitor, "your fame will sneak back unaided after our election unless you can perform a little task I have in mind."

"You interest me," said the great detective. "If it is not a secret, would you mind telling me who you are; also the name of your proud city. And you might mention the little task you have in mind for me."

"My name is Eben Bumpus, I am Mayor of the fair city of Bumpusville, Idaho. We have wimmin voters out there"——

"That's no fair cry, then," sneered Seldum Seezit, who did not appear to be in sympathy with the equal suffrage thing.

"Course it isn't fair; it never was fair for wimmin to vote, but them wimmin have got sore on me and declare they will defeat me this year when I run for Mayor. Now, I've always run for Mayor and it's got to be a habit. I've always been elected, too. But I married a girl from the East, who is so much more stylish than any of the native Bumpusville wimmin that they're mad, and so they're going to defeat me so's my wife cannot be the leadin' lady of the city."

"Very interesting. And what is the little task you wish me to perform?" and Seldum Seezit's face lighted up with all the pleasure of a man dying of ptomaine poisoning.

"Come out to Bumpusville and prevent them wimmin from defeating me," said Mayor Bumpus, impressively.

Seldum Seezit, the world-famous detective, looked at Mayor Bumpus, of Bumpusville, keenly.

CHAPTER II.

"ARE they all as nutty as you, out in Bumpusville, or do they elect you Mayor because you are the chief nut?" asked Seldum Seezit.

"I knew it!" exclaimed Mayor Bumpus. "I told Bill Tinker, our Postmaster, that while you might be a great detective, you couldn't do this stunt."

"Is that so?" queried our hero, "I suppose you bet Bill a whole cigar or something? Well, you lose."

"Do you mean," exclaimed Mayor Bumpus joyously, "that you will come out to Bumpusville and prevent them wimmin voters from defeating me?"

"Go back and pay Bill Tinker your wager. Tell him I said it couldn't be done"——

"But I'll furnish the make-us," pleaded Mayor Bumpus, who reads the leading newspapers.

"Tell Bill I said no one could do that. Then go along with your campaign. If you are not elected I will hand you a check with five figures on it [illegible] you are elected, pay me $10,000."

CHAPTER III.

ELECTION day in Bumpusville dawned with bright skies and warm zephyrs.

All over the fair city of Bumpusville there was excitement. The women voters were going to defeat Eben Bumpus, pioneer settler of Bumpusville and its continuous Mayor.

There was no doubt of this. Even the old time politicians had given up hope of saving Eben.

Eben himself was in doubt. He had heard nothing of Seldum Seezit, and his desire to tell Bill Tinker the truth nearly killed him.

The polls were to open at noon and close at 4 P. M.

By 9 o'clock that forenoon every woman voter was out and about the streets, doing splendid campaign work and looking in the store windows.

By 9.15 twenty-five bill posters and one hundred hand-bill dispensers were abroad. By 10:15 every fence and wall and building, every post and ledge and wagon, every tree and pole and box, was covered with posters in lurid colors, while fully ten glaring hand bills had been passed to every man, woman, child and suffragist within a radius of ten miles of Bumpusville.

This is what the posters and bills contained:

VISIT OUR NEW STORE IN THE IDAHO BLOCK, ON MAIN STREET.

By 11 o'clock excitement reigned supreme in Bumpusville.

CHAPTER IV.

AT NOON the doors were flung open. Ten clerks were lined up behind counters piled high with goods.

They were wonderful bargains, to be sure. The proprietor, a Frenchman, stood in the midst of the crowd, upon a platform, and made the announcement:

"Ze grr-r-eat barrgrinz!" he shouted.

"Zis way for ze bonnette, zis way for ze robe, zis way for ze Fair hat!"

In this manner the proprietor kept the women dashing from corner to corner of the store.

At four o'clock he ordered the doors locked.

One by one the women filed out with their purchases. By five o'clock the store was empty.

It had been a great day for the women of Bumpusville.

CHAPTER V.

YES, indeed. It had been a great day for the women of Bumpusville.

It had also been some day for the men of Bumpusville.

The Bumpusville Evening Banner was on the street. Its front page was black with heavy type.

"EBEN BUMPUS AGAIN MAYOR!"

Another headline, following, told the story: "NOT A WOMAN IN BUMPUSVILLE VOTED TO-DAY!"

That night a messenger called Mayor Bumpus to the inn. "Gentleman in Room 33 to see you," the message read.

"I'll take your check for $10,000," said the guest.

Mayor Bumpus looked at him.

"Sufferin' Suffragettes, you're Seldum Seezit!" ejaculated Bumpus.

"Good guess," replied our hero, laughing.

"Tell me, on what grounds do you claim the money? It wasn't you, but the big bargain sale, that kept the women away from the polls and allowed me to be elected," said Mayor Bumpus. "A strange Frenchman came here and opened the store."——

In an instant our hero detective adjusted a false moustache and goatee, shrugged his shoulders and said, "Step thees way for ze grr-reat bar-r-grainz! 'Ze Frenchman.' Mr. Seezit! You win. You are a wonder," and Mayor Bumpus sat down to write out the check.

"Never mind the check," exclaimed Seldum Seezit, gloatingly, "I merely wanted to test you. There is nothing to pay. This work was a pleasure."

"But you earned it," urged Bumpus. "You deserve it. Why are you refusing this money?"

"The satisfaction and pleasure is all mine," said Seldum Seezit, wearily. "You see, my wife is a suffragette, also."

CHAPTER XXIV.

La Belle France.

FRANCE was known to the ancients as "Gaul." This explains why that ancient author wrote the famous words:

"All Gaul is divided in three parts—wine, women and song."

France had the greatest assortment of Kings on record, including Pepin, four feet tall, and his son, Charlemagne, seven feet tall, but in France we merely shrug our shoulders at such problems and change the subject.

About the time England became as fond of France as Canada is of reciprocity there came the Maid of Orleans, Joan of Arc. She climbed into a tin union suit, mounted a white horse and won many battles. But the English finally captured her, pried off her metal hare-n-skirt and burned her at the stake—which is a neat finish, even for a French girl.

About fifteen Louis were kings, with more or less success. Some were so popular the populace cheered when they died, some even died by request. In fact, Louis XVI. lost his head entirely.

Then came Napoleon, the bantam-weight champion trouble-maker in history.

When Napoleon married the queenly Josephine there was a lot of gush in the society columns concerning this "perfect match," but the match proved to be a bit off the colonistic shade. Their biggest trouble was the fact they had no little troubles, so Napoleon took a sort of Reno cure.

Napoleon made himself emperor and decorated every thing with "Emperor N.," but the "N" meant "nit." He got cold feet at Moscow and the marble heart at Waterloo.

After that there was more bloodshed and more trouble, and France finally became a republic, but with all the fun of mud slinging campaigns left out.

To-day everyone goes to France, especially Paris, and then they come home and tell about how of what they saw.

CHAPTER XXV

Germany.

GERMANY is composed of Kaiser William. The Kaiser himself is authority for this.

There are a few paintings and books and songs and operas and buildings and ships, etc., in Germany, but the Kaiser painted and wrote and inspired and composed and erected and planned them.

He is so great a man that he is not even afraid of his cook.

Germany also consists of a large assortment of other places, such as Prussia, Austria, Hungary, Poland, Bohemia, etc. There are twenty-six such places. Remove them, and Germany would be no bigger than a doughnut after someone had eaten the ring around it and the wind had blown the hole away.

But it is a powerful country, and, notwithstanding all this talk about war with England, should Germany see fit to fortify its borders with limburger cheeses, no man could enter the country alive.

Berlin is the capital. It is on the River Spree, so named because of the breweries in that vicinity.

You have seen the German comedians upon the stage in our country? Then remember this, if you wish to know how a German looks and acts, he is entirely different from these stage characters.

I would like to write of the glory of the past history of Germany, of its wars and rulers, but the Kaiser will not stand for it. As he said to me when he heard I was about to write this great history:

"Josh, forget it yet, what has gone before; I am all the go."

Switzerland.

POOR little Switzerland is hemmed in among the Alps between the spaghetti of Italy, the garlic of France and the wienerwurst of Germany.

No wonder they climb mountains and yodel for assistance!

Until 1307 Switzerland belonged to Germany, but Albert the First of Germany was a Grouch and appointed a man named Gesler to rule Switzerland.

Now Gesler lived with his wife's mother.

And so he took it out on Switzerland. "Somebody will obey me, somebody will think I amount to something," he snarled, and he put his cap on a pole with orders that everyone in Switzerland should bow to this cap.

"Take down your old gray bonnet,
With the punk tassels on it,
The Swiss will never bow to such a jay!"

This is the sentimental ballad William Tell sang the day he saw Gesler's cap on the pole.

"Who makes a sing mit that?" yelled Gesler.

"Tell," they told him.

"What Tell?" he roared.

Everyone knows how William Tell shot the apple from his son's head, how he had another arrow for Gesler in case he missed the apple, and how, through his efforts, Switzerland got her liberty.

Switzerland has the steepest mountains and hotels in the world. In the Winter the mountain guides make a good living jabbing holes in Swiss cheese with their alpenstocks.

And another thing that gives Switzerland a proud record—she has never, since the world began, lost a naval battle!

There is worth making a mention."

And so you see, dear reader, I would surely be pinched for lese majeste if I disobeyed these orders.

"ARE you still looking for your dog?"
"Yes."
"Why don't you put an ad in the paper?"
"What's the use; the dog can't read."

"HOW was it that you didn't recover damages for your accident?"
"I didn't know more than half the men on the jury."
"You told me yesterday you knew more than all of them."

MARSHALL MONTGOMERY,

"I WAS awful green before I was married."
"And now?"
"Now I'm black and blue."

"MY husband certainly is good to me. Every Sunday he takes me to ride in the car, and"——
"Which one?"
"Oh, the Eighth Avenue."

CHORUS LADY—My, but that dress is an awful fit.
Soubrette—Yes, and you'd have a worse fit if you were ever lucky enough to wear one as good.

MABEL HITE,

"YOU'll just have to change your repertoire if you want to stay at this theatre."
"I can't, sir; they're at the laundry."

ETHEL GREEN,

"JOHN, wake up; listen; there are robbers in the house!"
"You're dreaming; they're all in the benate."

"I SEE all the Italian barbers in town are on a strike."
"What for?"
"They refuse to handle Turkish towels."

FRENCHMAN VISITOR—Why are you hitting your head with that hammer, my poor man?
Lunatic—It feels so good when I stop.

BILLY GOULD and GENEVA.

SHE—Let me see the thinnest thing you have in a shirtwaist.
He—She's just gone out to lunch, madam.

"SAY, here, I've brought some tripe home for dinner."
"You're always thinking of sump'n soused."

"WHAT makes my razor so dull, anyhow?"
"I don't know; it was all right yesterday when I opened the sardines."

NORTON AND NICHOLSON,

WOMEN were made to look as pretty as they can, and men were made so that women wouldn't go to all that trouble for nothing.

From "THE RUNAWAY,"

"I KNOW a good joke about a rooster."
"Pullet."

"AN awful lot of girls are stuck on me."
"Yes, they must be an awful lot."

"HAVE you ever eaten frog's legs?"
"No, I don't want to croak yet."

"WHEN my brother was married last week he got an awful fright."
"I should say he did; I saw her on the street this morn."

CAMERON AND KENNEDY,

"HIS father ran away with a pretty dancer. His grandfather eloped with a singer. His great-grandfather——
I see. The fruit of the family tree was peaches and dates."

"DO you want to be an actress?"
"I don't care much about being an actress, but I'd love to go on the stage."

HE—Really, I would be delighted to escort you home in a taxi, but you see I'm rather hard up just now; in fact, I'm broke. Now if you could lend——
She—I'd be only too glad to help you out, but you see—well, my money isn't where I can get it just now.
He—Oh, don't mind a little thing like that. I'll look the other way. Where do you keep it?
She—I couldn't think of telling you that.
He—Oh, yes you could. Be a sport.
She—Well, if you really must know, it's home on the dresser.

WILBUR MACK AND NELLA WALKER,

PUBLISHER—You must make love to the prima donna.
Author—But I am in love with some one else.
Publisher—That doesn't matter. If you don't make love to her she won't sing. This is business.
Author—You must let my private affairs alone.
Publisher—A prima donna isn't private affairs.

ENJOY [illegible] may being is bound by nature to lead its own life; it must be free to [illegible] a free being.

MY [illegible] you're a great expert on tulips, but you can't make new [illegible] grow.

MY [illegible] could [illegible] to discover the North Pole, but not a cent to [illegible] an immortal destiny.

SOMETIMES [illegible], thinking what I might have done with vegetables, I hardly wasted so much time studying Greek.

WHEN you have a pet, you like all of that breed. You [illegible] and [illegible] notice some little traits in them all. It makes you feel differently toward all the rest of them.

YOU can't tell me that man is perfect; that he doesn't live more than one life; that the soul does not pass on and on. The present personal energy must continue, or what IS God?

RELIGION has frequently led to the stake. I never heard the Spanish Inquisition called healthy for anybody, taking it [illegible] terms. Still, religion flourishes. Put your old-fashioned, uncleanable, ginger-bread heaven blew up ten years ago—went out.

IF my voice can carry thousands of miles over the telephone, why can't the soul, with the God-given force behind it, dart over the entire universe? Is Thomas Edison greater than God?

IN hypnotism our thoughts take possession of the person we hypnotize. When we enter their bodies, something goes out of them—the shadow self. This self can be sent out of the room, even to a long distance. This self is the force which, I believe, leaves us entirely after death on the first, second or third day. This force you could send back after death—the astral envelope.

WE never really die; we couldn't if we tried. See the gardens—they die, but they come back all the better for it. It is a nap from which we waken rested, freshened, a sleep which the old fall into, tired and slow, and spring up from like children tumbling out of bed—ready to frolic through another world.

MY lad, there are small soldiers in this world that are handicapped when they come into the battle of life. Their parents have not fitted them for the struggle—little moon-moths! They look in at the windows; they beat at the panes; they see lots of happy firesides—lights of homes—but they never get in.

"BUT Bertillon would arrest you and give you up to the French government along with the cryptogram," said Vampa [illegible].

"No, for as soon as I get the key, I will stab M. Bertillon.

"Tchouvine will go along without making any signs of knowing me. I will take care not to be arrested at once, if at all. Tchouvine will go with me to the house where the deciphering is to be done, and will wait for us nearby.

"I will communicate the [illegible] we will not see each other [illegible] we meet here—that is, if I come back.

As she unfolded this simple plan, which she had so swiftly evolved and which was so very dangerous, the four men exclaimed in admiration.

When the young woman had finished, Tchouvine said tenderly:

"Dear Vera, is your [illegible] up?"

"Quite."

"Then I will go with you to Paris," said Tchouvine. "When do we leave?"

"To-morrow morning. When we go from here we are not to notice [illegible] other. We are not to travel in the same compartment, nor stop at the same [illegible] in Paris.

"I understand. Thursday evening at 8, railroad bridge, Rue d'Alesia."

"Then go now and pack your bag. We take the 9 o'clock train to-morrow morning for Paris. Until Thursday, then, Tchouvine."

"Until Thursday, Vera."

Trembled with Emotion

Trembling with his emotion, he clasped the cold hand Vera held out to him and went out.

"Now," she said to Vampa, Garrilo and Martiali, "each of you will copy the cryptogram and keep the copy. When Tchouvine or I return, or both of us, you will come together here to decipher Severac's letter. Whatever happens, at least one of you will be at liberty."

The three men set about their task at once, in obedience to the young girl who so resolutely and calmly had taken command of the anarchist and terrorist refugees in Switzerland.

Meanwhile Vera lapsed into a profound study. Her emotion could not in any way disturb the impassiveness of her beautiful goddess-like head.

She thought of her father, who would be recalled as Roltman, if one remembered his terrorist exploits in Russia, or as Severac, if his anarchistic attempts in France. Where was he? Where was he coming from? She was infinitely happy to know that he was [illegible] though it was less a daughter's joy than a disciple's fervent attitude.

On Thursday evening, March 30, at 8 o'clock, a man and a woman arrived simultaneously, but by different routes, at the railroad bridge spanning the Rue d'Alesia, in Paris, near Montsouris Park. After being assured that no one was following [illegible] man and woman approached one another.

"Tchouvine, it is to be to-morrow morning."

"Yes, Vera, at what time?"

"Ten o'clock."

"Where?"

"At Bertillon's house, No. 19 Rue des Fleurs, Avenue de Clinchy.

"The Cite is a narrow avenue with two exits—one on the Avenue de Clinchy, the other on the Rue de la Louquiere. It is bordered by gardens each with a house at the back of it. The house is quite small, and, fortunately, those next to it on either side are vacant. Bertillon will be there [illegible] with an old maid servant."

"[illegible] What am I to do?"

"I understand. But if you fail? If he calls for help?"

"I shall not fail. He won't have time to call. Until to-morrow, Tchouvine."

"Until to-morrow, Vera."

At 10 the next morning Vera rang at M. Bertillon's garden gate. An old maid servant opened for her.

Proverbs of Broadway

By DOROTHY DIX

Man's vanity is woman's opportunity.

Tr[illegible]es at the roots of a woman's hair.

The one crop that never fails is the wild oat crop.

Every man is an essential monogamist—for his [illegible].

No women are so good as those who have never been tempted.

The lack of the price keeps many a man from leading the double life.

Queer that a young girl never loves an old man unless he is rich.

The white woman's burden is trying to be beautiful though ugly.

We pay more dearly for our mistakes than we ever do for our sins.

The one compensation of poverty is the line that it gives us on our friends.

A woman loves a man for what he is. A man loves a woman for what he imagines her to be.

Many a wife asks her husband for the bread of love, and he gives her a tombstone.

The woman who loses her husband's love has generally been guilty of contributory negligence.

When the gods would make a man an easy mark they delude him with the belief that he understands woman.

There are two secrets that every woman can keep—her age and what bait she used in catching her husband.

The most valuable talent that any woman can possess is to be born with the ability to weep without her nose getting red.

A pair of tight shoes will do more to restrain a man from roaming from his fireside of an evening than all the Ten Commandments.

When a man in the city makes money he goes to the country to teach the farmers how to farm. When a man in the country makes money he comes to town to teach the bulls and bears how to make money in Wall Street. The result is the same in both cases.

The Man Who Laughed

By ADA PATTERSON

BELIEVE, as we may that many smiles are unbecoming to a man and that the male of the race has smile and smile and be a villain we must, if we have turned interestedly the pages of a fascinating book, hastily admit that there is little harm in the man who can laugh.

Laugh, not twitter. Laugh, not strangle an anaemic chuckle far down in his throat. Laugh, not achieve a cheerful contortion of the facial muscles which does not correspond with the time of audible mirth. No, a hearty laugh, and we know it when we hear it as we know an honest man, and a tender woman when we meet them, without need of definition or analysis.

At a down-town restaurant, where the city officials gather for lunch and sometimes for dinner, I noted two middle-aged men whose boyish laugh when they find a new swearing hole.

One was a dark-haired man with swell cut features and a clear, woman ish skin, and in the wash experience had carved into lines of firmness. The other was olive skinned. He had an aggressive nose and a strong jaw. Each bore the stamp in clothes and manner of the successful man. The first would be said to be the fineness of his perceptions, the tact of his dealings with his fellow man. The other, by his force, had doubtless overborne all difficulties and obstacles in his way.

They had finished their dinner and were leaning back in the after-dinner stage of content that is accompanied by the unhurried smoking of a good cigar. The clock's hands traveling about its face pointed to 8:30. One of them reminded the other that it was time good commuters were taking train out of town. In some smart newly painted suburban home with a lawn, with trees, and with a glimpse of hill or sea, impossible in town at three times the price.

The wife of each was doubtless turning anxious glances up the street where her lord's figure should appear, but had not. And anxious thoughts about the temptations of a great city that beset the suburbanite who lingers in a great city assailed her. What was Tom doing? What mischief would Harry be up to now? So they thought and worried and manufactured wrinkles, while I, an unseen neighbor at a table close to that of their spouses, heard this:

"How many houses have you built now, for heaven's sake?" from the olive-skinned man.

"Three besides the home," replied the sandy-haired man. Then he laughed a real life-prolonging laugh.

"What's the matter?"

"Nothing much; only, every time I think of it I have to laugh. I'm planting some flower seeds in our front yard. The other day I said to my wife, 'If I pointed these seeds the wrong way, how do you suppose the flower would grow?'"

The sandy man laughed. The olive-skinned one followed him with a deep bass.

"Of course, it's ridiculous, but it kind of bowled me over to think of those plants growing down instead of up—starting toward China. Ha! ha!"

He was right. It was a ridiculous thought, quite unworthy of the respected city official you could see he was. But he had been all day at a desk. He had talked with more than fifty persons. He needed some lightening nonsense, and the little conceit about the plant growing downward instead of upward gave it to him. I found the tired lines of my own face relaxing, so infectious is genuine mirth.

The olive skinned man talked of a neighbor of his. "He's a nice chap, but his name's Percy," he said. "He waited the name and he bribed his wife soon after they were married to give him a nickname. They've got a baby now. He was setting up the cigars to the boys at the station the other day and I said: 'Well, I suppose the little chap will be named Percy, Jr.?' He glared at me. 'Not on your life,' he said. 'That boy's going to be called Bill!'"

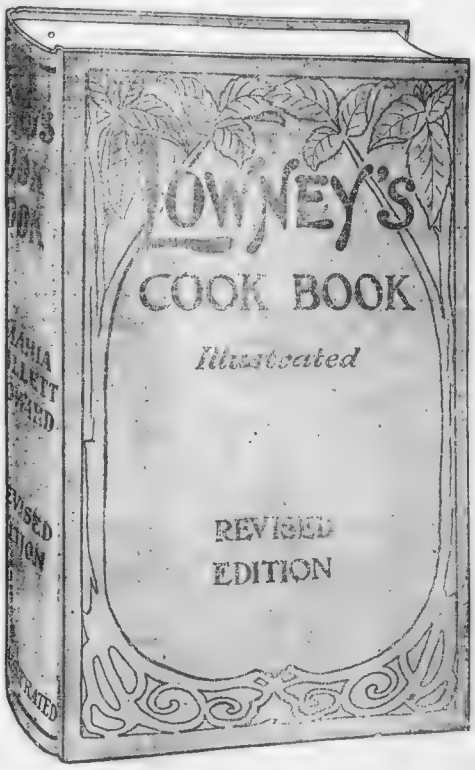
They laughed together and until the cigars had vanished in smoke and they had said good-bye and started to their respective stations for the train home, they had gone on laughing at light neighborhood chat like this. Vain, foolish imaginings of those women with puckered foreheads and down-drawn lips, watching the village road.

Let Us Tell You a Secret About Lowney's Cook Book

When the Lowney Co. decided to publish a New Cook Book they looked about for The Woman Who Stood Highest in the Profession of Cooking in this country. They found her in Maria Willett Howard, former Principal of the Boston Cooking School, and at present connected with the foremost school of Domestic Science in this country.

They told Miss Howard they wanted a cook book which would be different from all others, which would be practical, economical, new and useful alike to the young housekeeper, as well as the experienced cook; in a word a Cook Book which every woman would want, no matter how many other Cook Books she had.

No expense was spared and as a result was published this splendid book of 1450 new receipts, profusely illustrated and durably bound. You would be amazed if you knew how many thousand dollars were spent on just authorship and illustrations. It is the equal of any $2.50 Cook Book on the market. Up to the present time it has been sold everywhere at $1.25.



Now the Lowney Co. do not publish this book for profit, but rather to gain the friendship of American housekeepers by giving them a $2.50 Cook Book at about what it costs to make it.

The American was able therefore to make an arrangement with the publishers whereby it can supply this Cook Book to its readers at just what it costs to make it, plus the small expense of delivering it into your hands.

LILY ELSIE AND IAN BULLOUGH, SCOTCHMAN TO WHOM SHE IS ENGAGED

MRS. J. B. FRENCH SURE SHE'LL NOT WED J. J. VAN ALEN

After Three Months' Heart Reading Fascinating Widow Says No to Rich Widower.

TOO MUCH STEPDAUGHTER

Miss Sarita Ward to Marry British Diplomat and Become a Scottish Baroness.

BY PAUL PIERRE RIGNAUX.
Special Cable to Sunday American.

PARIS, Nov. 4.—After three months of deliberation and consultation Mrs. J. Barton French, the wealthy and accomplished widow of Barton French, former [illegible] of J. Pierpont Morgan, has decided not to marry J. J. Van Alen. Mrs. Barton French paid the Van Alens a prolonged visit at Newport last season, and then there was a well founded belief that her marriage with America's most noted widower was only a question of time. Miss Van Alen, however, did not look with a favorable eye on the approaching marriage of her father with the young and fascinating widow, and this is said to be the cause of Mrs. Barton French's adverse decision since her recent return to Paris. A long line of hitherto weeping European noblemen has consequently taken heart again. Duke Richelieu of France, Count Walkenstein of Austria and an English nobleman whose name has been connected with a Paris actress, have laid siege to her again. Count Walkenstein, who is attached to the Austrian embassy in London, is at present in the lead. It is stated that Mrs. Barton French's mother, Mrs. Arthur Inkerly, favors Count Walkenstein. The Count is the proud owner of many castles, and Mrs. Inkersly and her new husband recently visited one of them, the Schloss-Razets in the Tyrol.

Fine Private Music Room.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Barton French, who is very musical and the best amateur singer in the Paris American colony has fitted up one of the finest private music rooms in Paris. Here she pours forth her soul in profuse strains, not unpremeditated, like those of the skylark, but in the most finished fashion and the lovesick action of the great house of Richelieu, himself half American, for his mother now the Princess of Monaco, was formerly Miss Heine of New Orleans, the Austrian owner of Tyrolese castles, and the versatile English statesmen are all forgotten in a revelry of song.

The marriage of Miss Sarita Ward, a daughter of the well known sculptor, Herbert Ward and granddaughter of C. H. Sanford, of New York, who amassed a fortune building Argentine railroads, will take place next month.

Evidently the granddaughters of the New York railroad builder like diplomatists, for Miss Sarita Ward's fiance is Colville Adrian de Rune Barclay, secretary of the English legation at Bucharest and only a few months ago her younger sister was married to Eric Phipps, of the British embassy in Paris. Miss Sarita Ward's fiance is a son of Dowager Lady Barclay and the late Sir Colville Barclay, the eleventh baronet, so Mr. Sandford's granddaughter bids fair to be the twelfth Baroness. The Barclay baronetcy is Scottish and dates from 1668.

Troubetskoy's Wolf Again.

Prince Paul Troubetskoy's pet wolf, Vasco, which created a riot at one of his recent dinners by attacking a butler for whom the wolf had taken a violent dislike, has made more trouble for the famous Russian sculptor.

Vasco, while retaining his Shylock designs for a pound of flesh or more from the butler, has developed a new idiosyncracy. He has literally a devouring hatred for blue as a color for dress. The other day the Prince was taking Vasco out in the avenue by Bois for his usual promenade when a workman dressed in the customary blue suit with a red sash passed, or rather tried to pass. Vasco broke away from his master and made a ferocious attack on the workman, whose life was saved by the intervention of the police. While the wolf was being held by four men and the Prince was examining the bitten leg of the workman, the wolf again broke away and recommenced his meal off the leg of the workman. When the excitement had subsided, Prince Troubetskoy thought he had arranged matters by a generous contribution to the workman, but next morning a representative of the police called at the Prince's home, 23 Avenue Weber and suggested that wolfery in the heart of Paris was scarcely the proper thing outside the Zoological Gardens and that he would please the police department as well as the public generally if in future he would give up wolves as pets and take to canaries.

Since the recent departure of Mrs. Amy Crocker Ash Gillig Gouraud for America M. de Max, France's celebrated emotional actor, has lost his talent almost as completely as did Trilby when Svengali withdrew his influence.

It is said that Mrs. Gouraud staged at great expense a play called "Le Typhon" for de Max. She attended all the rehearsals, superintended the costumes and even gave stage directions. M. Peiret, an eccentric dressmaker, is credited with having helped Mrs. Gouraud with the costumes. While here she missed neither evening nor matinee performances.

All went merry as a marriage feast until her departure, and though Mrs. Gouraud's visit to America is said to be for the purpose of making proximate and pecuniary preparation to wed the handsome de Max, the actor through her absence has lost his cunning. De Max has become a commonplace ranter, indifferent to his art, all his enthusiasm has oozed out, all his emotion has frozen and not a scintilla of inspiration is left."

Russian Premier Saves 1,500 Jews.

IUZOVKA, Russia, Nov. 4.—More than 1,500 Jews in the Yekaterinoslav district, who have taken up residences there since 1882 and under a recent ruling of the Governor are liable to expulsion, appealed to Premier Kokovsoff. As a result the Governor has issued a new charter in which he states that only those who have become residents of the district since 1906 will be expelled.

AMERICAN WOMEN AS SIMPLICITY APOSTLES

English Papers Hold Up Mrs. Ava Astor and Lady Cunard as Bright Examples.

By HENRY T. LOVATT.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—More than one paper has made a point of praising the best dressed American women in London [illegible] those to the [illegible]. The papers note that Mrs. Astor appeared in her box at Covent Garden this week wearing around her beautiful dressed hair only a narrow French wreath of pink rosebuds. Her gown was of [illegible] with the exception of [illegible] pearls, Mrs. Astor wore hardly any jewels.

Lady Cunard, another smartly dressed American, wore a very thin band of diamonds in her fair hair and Mrs. George Cornwallis-West dispensed with any head ornament altogether. Lady Decies, although recovered from her illness, has been advised to Winter on the continent, and she and her husband will spend the worst months on the Riviera.

Mrs. Amory Moore, who has been entertained for several months past at Strathpeffer, is shortly going abroad.

Mrs. [illegible] finds Paris more congenial than London and it is doubtful whether she will make another attempt to entertain on a large scale here.

Mrs. David Beatty is in Venice, but will soon [illegible] at her hunting lodge [illegible]. She and her husband, the admiral, will hunt three times a week. The Duchess of Roxburghe has a house full of guests, including Lady Sybil Grant, Lord Rosebery's daughter; the Earl and Countess of Pembroke and Lady Evelyn Ward. While the Duchess was entertaining her husband stayed at Yorke cottage with the King for two or three days. This shooting cottage is too small for married couples and only small [illegible] parties are invited.

Mrs. Arthur Curtis James recently arrived in London from Paris and is living at the Hyde Park Hotel.

Mrs. William Leeds arrived from Paris this week and is at the Ritz, having given up Mrs. Keppel's house, which she leased for the season. She returns to America shortly, but expects to spend next season [illegible] had become one of the most popular American hostesses.

George F. Baker, Jr., and his bride are also at the Ritz [illegible] lately [illegible] visiting Switzerland next week.

The Duchess of Marlborough will give a reception next week when she will [illegible] a sale of Christmas handies, made by prisoners' wives, for whom she has organized a home in London.

A number of well-known people got caught in the worst gale that has swept the channel for some years while crossing from Paris this week. At Dover the sea [illegible] waiting to convey its passengers to London. Among those aboard were the Duchess of Westminster, Lady Newborough and Mrs. Henry Coventry.

HATTIE FORSYTHE'S CHICKS.

Domesticity Now Woos Her from Artistic Career.

PARIS, Nov. 4.—Miss Hattie Belle Forsythe, having outgrown her artistic exile, which was born of temperamental inspiration and encouraged by the interests of certain wealthy New Yorkers, is about to leave Paris and go home for a short visit before returning to England to indulge in her latest, dearest desire—domesticity.

When Hattie came to Paris, more than two years ago, to study singing, she was most enthusiastic for her art, but interest in her career began to wane when her vanity was flattered by throngs of desirable men who flocked after her. One of these, Sir William Ashyn Angore, met her in the south of France.

So since this time Hattie has been under the supervision of Sir William's chaperone and her friends expect her marriage will occur shortly after her return from America. Already a villa at Nice has been rented and Sir William's country home is being put in order for its new mistress.

WILL HONOR WANAMAKER.

London to Hang His Portrait in Guildhall.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—The portrait of an American citizen soon will grace the walls of the famous Guildhall, which formerly had been reserved for pictures of the lord mayors, civic dignitaries of the city of London, and kings and queens who have been their banquet guests. It is that of John Wanamaker, according to an announcement made by the lord mayor this week to the common council, amid much enthusiasm.

Mr. Wanamaker was a guest of the lord mayor at the Coronation banquet attended by King George, Queen Mary and twenty-five other royalties. The picture will be presented by Mr. Wanamaker and will contain portraits of all those present at the banquet, in commemoration of the event. He leaves the choice of the artist, the size and detail of the picture to the Civic Corporation, making no stipulations as to cost.

NEW OPERA BY STRAUSS.

Wealthy Upstart Aping Nobleman Is Theme.

BERLIN, Nov. 1.—According to an announcement issued by the Deutsches Theatre Dr. Strauss has another surprise in store for the public. He has gone to French sources for his inspiration. Molliere's comedy, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme," which is about to be produced at the [illegible] Theatre has for its hero a wealthy upstart who is trying to ape the ways of a nobleman. The stage directions call for the production, incidentally, of a little opera with a ballet.

Dr. Strauss is now composing an opera for the purpose, using the text provided by Hugo von Hofmannsthal, "Ariadne auf Naxos." The work will be completed in time for production this season.

AMERICAN TO WED DAUGHTER OF KING

By MARQUIS DE CASTELLANE.
(Special Cable to Sunday American)

PARIS, Nov. 4.—The announcement of the engagement of Selby Myrick, a young lawyer of Savannah, Ga., to the beautiful daughter of the Marquise d'Avenel, of Paris, means also that the American lawyer is about to marry a descendant of the Kings of the Asturias and founder of the Spanish monarchy. For Mamzelle d'Avenel is descended on her mother's side from the Guerreros, a Spanish family whose nobility dates back to the Pelayo, who was king of the Asturias in the eighth century.

There is a mingling of the blood of many races in this beautiful girl bride destined for America. Her maternal great-grandfather was Grand M[illegible] of the Court of Alexander I of Russia. On her father's side she is the great great-granddaughter of the Marquise de Ravenel, who subsequently became Duchess de Richelieu. This mixture of blood has resulted in cheeks and eyes of vivid Spanish, Titian hair and neck and arms of that pearly whiteness which characterizes the women of the north.

It will please their numerous American friends to learn that Mr. and Mrs. Greger Bakhmetieff will soon join the diplomatic corps in Washington. Mrs. Bakhmetieff was formerly Miss Mary Beale, a daughter of the late General Beale of Washington. She is a sister of Mrs. John R. McLean and an aunt of Edward Beale McLean, who married Miss Evelyn Walsh, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Thomas A. Walsh of Washington and Colorado.

Mrs. Bakhmetieff is very philanthropic and her favorite pets are dogs. When she goes for a walk she is accompanied by a whole kennel.

Before entering diplomatic service Ambassador Bakhmetieff served as an officer in the Russian army. He has had wide experience in European countries and in China. Ambassador and Mrs. Bakhmetieff were in Sofia when the American missionary, Miss Stone, was carried off by Turkish brigands. They co-operated cordially to bring about her release.

Mrs. Bakhmetieff is very proud of her big husband, whom she calls Jack. Preparatory to sailing for America the Bakhmetieffs are at Davos, taking the rest cure.

AMERICAN SONG SALON.

Mrs. Luckermeyer Inaurates New Movement in Paris.

PARIS, Nov. 4.—Mrs. Edward Luckermeyer, formerly Miss Frings, of New York, has inaugurated a new movement to the effect that in future American hostesses will entertain guests solely with American talent. Mrs. Luckermeyer means to reserve a fashionable salon of singing in France for American talent.

Because it is next to impossible for young Americans to obtain operatic engagements here owing to the ever existing intrigues in all the opera houses of the continent, she is directing all her energies to make American singers and American music fashionable. The salon movement was launched a few days ago at a dinner given at her home, No. 41 Avenue de la Alma in honor of Count Bernsdorf, the Austrian Ambassador to Washington. Count Bernsdorf, who is the husband of Mrs. Luckermeyer's stepdaughter, heartily enters into the patriotic American society movement for he knows it will make him popular in Washington.

Count Bernsdorf's daughter, who recently married Count Jacques de Portales, also aids Mrs. Luckermeyer's new move [illegible] that through the Countess will come the support to the movement of the powerful family of Portales, whose members have married in little over a generation, four American women.

Mrs. Chauncey Moore, an American baritone, charmed Mrs. Luckermeyer's guests and they experienced a sensation of thrills from a series of Indian songs sung with stirring sympathy by Miss Minnie Tracey of New York.

Federal Bank for Australia.

MELBOURNE, Nov. 4.—Prime Minister Fisher has drafted a bill providing for the creation of a federal bank, with a capital of £1,000,000 to be raised by bonds. It is proposed to have the institution managed by a board consisting of a governor and two directors.

Actress Has to Hire Secretary to Answer Letters of Congratulation and Love.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Lily Elsie, London's musical comedy favorite, who is soon to marry Ian Bullough, a young Scottish millionaire, whose first wife, Maudi Darrell, died only a year ago, will probably never appear on the stage again. This means the cancellation of her contracts with Manager Kiaw to appear in New York for the production of Franz Lebar's opera, "The Count of Luxemburg." Miss Elsie is now busily engaged buying hats, frocks and other things for her trousseau and spending the week-ends at house parties at the various country places of the Bullough family. Although there is a rumor that Mr. Bullough is in consultation with George Edwardes regarding Miss Elsie's reappearance [illegible] the stage from time to time, the fact is that he is simply closing up the contracts, for she herself has decided on retirement.

Another rumor is that she had a quarrel with Edwardes and decided to break all existing contracts when he refused to give her a [illegible] time her engagement to Bullough was announced. She believed that this much recognition of her position as London's idol was due her. Edwardes was too busy hunting for her successor to think about it, so she gave him a few additional bad moments by quitting the cast immediately instead of a month later as she had promised.

It is said that since her engagement was announced, Miss Elsie has had to engage a secretary to answer her voluminous correspondence. Her admirers are principally women, most of whom seem to think they have lost a personal friend. Such a hold has she had on the London playgoing public that even those newspapers not accustomed to such things [illegible] the leading news articles of the day.

ASTOR, JR., GETS WIGGING.

He and Fellow Directors of Guy's Hospital, London, Abused.

LONDON, Nov. 4.—Waldorf Astor, Jr., who is a member of the British Parliament and prominent in various essentially English activities, is sharing with several eminent Englishmen a bitter public attack regarding the alleged mismanagement of a big London hospital. The newspapers of late have frequently drawn attention to the cases of patients having died while under an anaesthetic at Guy's Hospital, the institution in question, which numbers Mr. Astor among its committee of management, together with Lord Aldenham, Viscount [illegible], Lord R. Cavendish, Viscount [illegible] and other notables.

It is declared that most of these deaths were quite avoidable and due to their being unqualified administrator of anaesthetics included in the permanent hospital staff. Poverty cannot be an excuse, for Guy's is one of the wealthiest of London hospitals as well as one of the largest. In recent years its balance sheet has shown surpluses amounting to many thousands of pounds, yet it annually issues printed appeals to the charitable and receives large sums notably from King Edward's Hospital Fund, which is distributed among the various institutions.

KAISER'S EX-FRIEND AGAIN IN TROUBLE

German Press Howls for Eulenburg to Be Brought to Trial, and Prince Takes to Bed.

By COUNT VON ELPHBERG.
Special Cable to Sunday American.

BERLIN, Nov. 4.—Prince Philip von Eulenberg, formerly the Kaiser's most intimate friend, is again the centre of interest owing to the loud demands that are being made for his immediate retrial for perjury. Consequently it is not surprising to hear that the Prince is reported very sick. Indeed, alarming bulletins are issued as to his condition. But these have been his tactics ever since his famous trial was stopped, owing to his illness.

Every time the question of a fresh trial has been raised the Prince takes to his bed. Between times, however, he appears perfectly well and seems to be enjoying life. In the present instance affidavits have been filed that the Prince has been frolicking in the park of his castle of Liebenberg. This has raised a renewed outcry that the case be reopened. The Socialist newspapers are hotly denouncing the affair as a judicial farce and the wily Prince lies low in his sick bed and "says nuffin."

The Prince's original trial a few years ago was [illegible] nearly involved the Kaiser in a [illegible] owing to his majesty's friendship for the defendant. Von Eulenberg was [illegible] of terrible practices. He denied [illegible] and the prosecutor then indicted him for perjury. At this the Pri[illegible]

The Kaiser [illegible] comments on his remarks to Bishop Munsch at the Moslem influence in Africa, which has provoked press rebukes as being a particularly tactless utterance at [illegible] juncture. His majesty the other day received in audience Bishop Munsch, the head of the German mission in German East Africa, and inquired about the progress of the Mohammedan faith in Africa. Then he is recorded as having said:

"We must work energetically against the spread of the Moslem faith, otherwise Islam may prove a great danger to our colonies."

The newspapers point out that this remark comes badly from a monarch who only a few weeks ago was hailed by several thousand Mohammedans as the protector of Islam. [illegible] as a short-sighted blunder which may undo all the laborious work of the German diplomatists who in recent years have been endeavoring to gain the confidence and favor of the Mussulman [illegible].

The Kaiser [illegible] conversation expressed anger at the publicity given his private utterances and declared that the publication was a breach of confidence and good manners; moreover, it was unpatriotic. The press, he said should have hushed up such a report whereas the German newspapers spread it broadcast thus hampering the German foreign policy.

CARUSO'S TITLED MANAGER

Ledner Is a Privy Councillor with Entree to the Vienna Court.

FRANKFORT, Nov. 4.—Privy Councillor Ledner, manager for Caruso, is here in advance of his star, and [illegible] papers to show that he is a real dyed-in-the-wool Privy Councillor having the entree at the Vienna Court. He hopes Caruso will take him to America and introduce him to [illegible] Taft and official Washington. Of his star he said:

"Caruso leaves on October 31 for New York, to return to Europe in the middle of February. In March he will sing three [illegible] in Monte Carlo. Then there will be a short Paris season. During this [illegible] season he will sing in the 'Masked Ball' for the first time in Europe."

SIGNORA MARCONI AT ITALY'S COURT

By CAMILLE CIANFARRA.
Special Cable to Sunday American.

[illegible] among Italians, who are intensely proud of their distinguished fellow-countryman, and have accorded him a high place among the heroes [illegible] ment of all business and the immediate [illegible] wireless service to the Italian government.

Paterno, whose assassination of Signora Marconi's predecessor profoundly shocked the Italian aristocracy, has officially been declared insane, so that instead of suffering the death penalty or life imprisonment [illegible] moved to a comfort[illegible] the natural course of events after a few years, he will probably [illegible] cured.

Charge Miscarriage of Justice.

[illegible] this alleged miscarriage of justice and the papers, especially the socialistic ones, openly declare that this termination to the tragedy has been [illegible] the powerful influence [illegible] aristocratic family. The matter will probably soon be aired in the Chamber of Deputies.

The Tripolitan campaign has taken heavy toll from the Italian aristocracy and almost every home daily mourns the death of some brilliant young officer on the field of battle. News has been received [illegible] brilliant cavalry officer, was aide-de-camp and intimate friend of the Count of Turin cousin to the King. He was struck down while leading his men in a hand to hand encounter with the Arabs.

By his side fell the Marquis Granafei di Serranova, lieutenant in the Aosta Lancers, who had previously been decorated for conspicuous bravery.

Mourn for Duke.

The news that the Duke Riccardo Grazioli Santa, a lieutenant in the Royal navy [illegible] landing operations at Homs, creates deep sorrow, almost amounting to consternation among the Roman aristocracy. The Duke was barely twenty-four and the only son of [illegible] greatly beloved by all American residents in Rome.

Count Pompeo Campello della Sanina, gentleman in waiting to Queen Helena, was severely wounded while reconnoitering at the head of his cavalrymen near Tripoli. [illegible] Italy over the loss of such distinguished sons is a deep pride that the Roman aristocracy has demonstrated its [illegible] ancient traditions and disproved the stories so commonly circulated regarding its alleged degeneracy.

All the news received from the front shows that the Italian officers, who are drawn almost exclusively from the aristocracy, are from a military viewpoint, unnecessarily brave as they exposed themselves uselessly to the enemy's fire.

EX-PRINCESS REPLIES

Louisa of Saxony Scores Husband's Idle Life

TURIN, Nov. 4.—Ex-Princess Louisa of Saxony, whose memoirs were published the other day, replies in the Florentine [illegible] to the statement of her husband (Signor Toselli) which was made last month. In that statement Signor Toselli announced that he had begun legal proceedings for separation on the grounds of desertion and dishonor cast upon his family through indiscriminate circulation of "[illegible]

ROYAL PENS ARE POPULAR

Mightier Than Sceptre in Swaying Public Emotions

BERLIN, Nov. 4.—The number of royal writers on the Continent is by no means inconsiderable, nor are any of them really hidden by the pseudonyms they invariably assume. Of such wayfarers on the slopes of Parnassus the most widely known, no doubt, is "Carmen Sylva," who in real life is Elizabeth, Queen of Roumania.

Among others is Marie [illegible] of Naples, the "last of the Bourbons," as she [illegible] widow of the deceased King of Naples and the Sicilies. Her pen name is "Countess Isola" and under it she has published a series of religious works in [illegible].

The pseudonym "Th. von Bayer" hides from no German the personality of Princess Therese, daughter of the present nonagenarian Prince Regent Luitpold of Bavaria. The sister of the German Kaiserin, Princess Feodora of Schleswig-Holstein, who died some time ago, wrote many poems under the pseudonym "F. Hugin," and Princess Amalie of Saxony, who belonged to a past generation, wrote several [illegible] days.

FARR'S GRAY HAIR RESTORER

Do you sometimes glance at your daughter's gray hair and think of your own—gray and faded? It's about her you're thinking whether you'll allow anything so entirely under your control as gray hair to cause you worry and embarrassment.

Perhaps you're using a dye and the process of getting old that goes with it, because you know people whose hair is streaked with ugly shades—that's being worse off. Well, I've good news for you and all men who use FARR'S GRAY HAIR RESTORER. It is nothing to compare with a dye. It does not merely cover up the gray ness nor change the color instantly. It is sold under a positive guarantee that it is absolutely harmless. It restores the color so gradually and uniformly its use cannot be detected. It GRADUALLY gives gray hair the life and natural color that properly belongs to your hair, and prevents it turning gray. It restores the original color, leaving the hair soft and fluffy. It is clear and pure as water and pleasant to use. Using it the hair has returned to its natural color, it is a simple matter to keep it so. Don't experiment with dyes—they don't work, and the HOME RULE BY 1914 SAYS TYRONE M. P.

Boston Club Gets Prophecy from Richard McGhee, Invited to Banquet.

[illegible] to an invitation sent to him by the County Tyrone Club of Greater Boston [illegible] guest of honor at the annual [illegible] of the club, next Thursday evening, [illegible] McGhee, M. P. for Mid-[illegible] has sent the following letter to [illegible] secretary of the committee [illegible] ments. The letter is of public [illegible] Massachusetts because of Mr. [illegible] personal acquaintance [illegible] State and because also of [illegible] predictions he makes as a [illegible] Irish parliamentary party [illegible] for Ireland, which [illegible] this newspaper. Mr. McGhee writes:

[illegible] North street,
Lurgan, Ireland

[illegible] County of Tyrone Club of [illegible] are enjoying them [illegible] their first annual ball on [illegible] John Redmond and the [illegible] of the Irish party will be [illegible] ping Lloyd George to pass his [illegible] through the House of Commons and clearing the way for the home rule bill, which is to be presented to Parliament at the opening of next session, probably about the first week in February, 1912.

Message to Tyrone Exiles.

It ought to add to the enjoyment of the evening, when Tyrone exiles are told that the British Parliament will for the next two years be [illegible] into a bill for the restoration of our native Parliament [illegible] and thus [illegible] close the long [illegible] the Irish people have waged for national freedom and against forces almost impregnable. And it must be especially gratifying to the Tyrone exiles assembled on November 9 to know that no other county has contributed more [illegible] cause than their native one among the bushes.

The men and women of Tyrone have done more than a county share in the work of winning Irish national liberty. They have been true and faithful to the cause, and its leaders are [illegible] to make large sacrifices [illegible] and now they are [illegible] rewarded with a great triumph.

Liberty in 1913 or 1914.

Tell the exiles from Tyrone that Ireland will most probably secure her liberty in 1913, but most certainly not later than 1914. The House of Lords can block [illegible] in ascending to her perfect freedom. Ireland has dragged from its eminence that oligarchic institution and left it floundering in the mud, a bit of retributive justice which ought to gladden the hearts of all who love freedom.

Wishing you and your friends a very pleasant evening at your first annual ball I am

Yours sincerely,
RICHARD McGHEE.

A Helpless Invalid

Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

A woman who is sick and suffering, and won't at least try a medicine which has the record of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, is, it would almost seem, to blame for her own wretchedness. Read what this woman says:

Richmond, Mo. — "When my second daughter was eighteen months old I was pronounced a hopeless invalid by specialists. I had a consultation of doctors and they said I had a severe case of ulceration. I was in bed for ten weeks, had sinking spells, and was pronounced to be in a dangerous condition. My father insisted that we try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and brought me six bottles. I soon began to improve, and before it had all been taken I was as well and strong as ever. My friends hardly recognized me so great was the change." — Mrs. Woodson Brunstetter, Richmond, Mo.

There are literally hundreds of thousands of women in the United States who have been benefited by this famous old remedy, which was produced from roots and herbs over thirty years ago by a woman to relieve woman's suffering.

Read what another woman says:—

Jonesboro, Texas. — "I have used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for myself and daughter, and consider it unequalled for all female diseases. I would not be without it for anything. I wish every mother in America could be persuaded to use it as there would be less suffering among our sex then. I am always glad to speak a word of praise for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and you are at liberty to use this testimonial."—Mrs. James T. Lawrence, Jonesboro, Texas.

Since we guarantee that all testimonials which we publish are genuine, is it not fair to suppose that if Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had the virtue to help these women it will help any other woman who is suffering from the same trouble?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

The testimonials which are constantly being published in the Pinkham advertisements are guaranteed to be absolutely genuine, honest, and given without reward in any way whatever.

HOUSEMAIDS' UNION BEGINS VIGOROUS CAMPAIGN AGAINST EMPLOYMENT OFFICE METHODS

Backed by the big State branch of the American Federation of Labor, Boston Domestic Protective Workers' Union, largely made up of Back Bay housemaids, has begun an energetic organizing campaign to enroll every servant girl employed in the entire State on the membership books of the Housemaids' Union.

Mrs. Ellnore Hackett, the president, and Miss L. C. McDonald, the secretary of the Boston local, are the leaders in the new movement. It is largely through their efforts that the men's unions have taken up the fight of the servant girls. They are making a special plea for remedial legislation to control the employment agency evil, and, with the men co-unionists, will take up this phase of the question at a hearing to be given by the Intelligence Offices Commission next week.

There is no apparent desire on the part of these women leaders to do anything radical. At all meetings at which they expressed their views on the servant girl problem they make it clear that no general strike of housemaids is under consideration. They also disclaim any intention to set any arbitrary rules that it would be almost impossible for the housewives hiring servants to comply with, while at the same time insisting that servant girls need the protection that comes through collective action fully as much as girls in other callings.

Mrs. Hackett and Miss McDonald will attend the Intelligence Offices Commission hearings at the State House as representatives of the Boston local. They will be accompanied by President James W. Wall and Secretary-Treasurer Martin T. Joyce of the Massachusetts State Branch, A. F. of L.; Chairman John Weaver Sherman of the State Legislative Committee, President Frank H. McCarthy, Secretary Henry Abrahams and ex-President William H. O'Brien of the Boston C. L. U., Agent Arthur M. Huddell of the Boston A. F. of L. Building Trades' Department.

It is said, unofficially, that the municipal authorities have agreed to settle with the unions affected and that $50,000 will be expended to make the change in the different wage schedules. A number of the men are now getting the new and higher wage rates.

MEN OUTPULL HORSES.

Human Power Excels in Time and Distance at Maine Fair.

BANGOR, Nov. 4.—When Jabez Clark's pair of gray horses, weighing 3,200 pounds, won first prize in the pulling contest at Ripley fair everyone said it was a great team, but someone in the crowd said that horses were no good at pulling heavy loads—not so good as their weight in men, and offered to bet a keg of cider and five dollars that he could prove it. That made Jabez Clark mad, and he took the scoffer up on the bet. All hands quit everything else to see what kind of a bluff the city gambler was going to make. But it was no bluff.

The city man just picked out enough healthy-looking men to weigh 3,200 pounds, hitched them to the same load that Clark's horses had pulled, and offered cigars and the drinks if they would beat it. To the astonishment of the crowd and the humiliation of Jabez Clark, the 3,200 pounds of men pulled the load farther by twenty feet than the horses had done, and in considerably less time. And now the saying "strong as a horse" doesn't mean much of anything down Ripley way.

Start Branch of Order of Birt Abraham at Bangor.

BANGOR, Nov. 4.—Bangor Hebrews have formed a new fraternal society—Pine Tree Lodge, No. 500, Order of Birt Abraham, with a charter list of forty-two and many applications waiting. The officers are: President, H. Cohen; vice-president, Robert B. Hooper; treasurer, B. Dennis; recording secretary, Morris M. Cohen; financial secretary, Louis Richardson; conductor, H. B. Goldberg. Louis Goldberg has been appointed district deputy for Maine, east of Lewiston. The lodge was instituted by Grand Deputy H. Bernstein of Boston and Abraham Heller of New York, chairman of the endowment committee.

Snapshots of Various Candidates, Some Statesmen and Plain Politicians Now in the Public Eye

By A. POLITICAL SHARPE.

As election day draws almost upon us, a steady and very noticeable losing of confidence is apparent in the Republican camp, while on the other hand, the Democrats are waxing [illegible] enthusiastic every day over their chances for victory.

One of the reasons for the increasing enthusiasm on the part of the Democrats is the large and enthusiastic audiences which Governor Foss and the rest of the Democratic State ticket are meeting at their rallies everywhere. There is no denying the fact that the Democratic rallies are being much better attended than those of the Republicans.

As proof of the gradual depression in the hopes of the G. O. P. supporters, nothing stronger is needed than the words of the chairman of the Republican State Committee, Charles F. Hatfield. "Charlie," in heart-to-heart talks to Republican workers and Republican candidates for the Legislature, has several times during the past week or two made the admission that "things are not so [illegible], as good in some parts of the State as I would like to have them."

Chairman John [illegible] [illegible] to the contrary, is [illegible] [illegible] enthusiastic. [illegible] has been one of growing and astonishing enthusiasm. [illegible] number of forty [illegible] held in different sections of the State, [illegible] speakers have met with splendid receptions and have aroused the finest sort of enthusiasm. Everywhere the candidates have appeared the enthusiasm has never been short of the ovation character."

Predict Victory for Walsh.

The most remarkable development of the week and probably the most remarkable development of the campaign has been the growing talk in political circles to the effect that "it looks very much like Walsh for second place."

What makes the situation most remarkable is the fact that this talk is heard not only in Democratic circles but in Republican quarters as well. The political dopesters from whom this talk emanates, and they include some of the best judging politicians in the State, give the following reasons for their belief that Walsh is likely to win over Robert Luce, the Republican candidate:

Luce's attitude on Sunday laws. He is one of the strongest opponents of Sunday baseball and other liberal Sunday legislation which is very popular in every large community in the Commonwealth.

Luce's indorsement of party enrolment. The insertion of the Luce party enrolment law into the direct nominations act has been worked up as a strong issue by Mr. Walsh. Residents of the small towns in the Commonwealth are strongly opposed to party enrolment, which compels them to publicly state their party affiliation before being allowed to vote in the primaries. Many cases have arisen where men absolutely refused to make announcement of their choice and walked out of the polling places without voting. Walsh's denunciation of the law has aroused wonderful enthusiasm everywhere he has spoken and is especially appealing to the townsfolk upon whom the Republicans depend largely to carry them through over the Democratic majorities of the large municipalities.

Then there is the personality of the candidates. Luce is generally regarded as representing the "holder than thou" element. He is looked upon by many as a faddist on many questions of public interest. He has lost favor with the big anti-machine and progressive element in the Republican party because of his complete submission to the Lodge-Crane organization. Walsh, on the other hand, is one of the most popular men in the State. He is one of the finest orators in the Commonwealth. He makes a splendid appearance on the public platform and has always stood for progressive legislation. Walsh is picked to win.

Norman White Is Consistent.

The straightforward manner in which Norman H. White has announced that he will not take the stump for Frothingham and "would not speak on the same platform on which a member of the Republican State machine sits in this campaign," is characteristic of the man. Having strongly opposed the Republican machine and machine domination in politics in general, he consistently refuses to "go back into the fold."

Cavanagh For Speaker.

Representative James F. Cavanagh of Everett is gradually forging ahead as a possible speaker of next year's House. He has been pledged the support of a number of Republican members of the past Legislature and of new aspirants as well. Representative Cavanagh was one of the leaders of the House the past two years. He is the father of the anti-loan shark bill which was passed by this year's Legislature, placing the small loans business under a supervisor. He has made a remarkable record as a progressive in his two years in the lower legislative branch.

"Dave" Murray a Sure Winner.

Representative "Dave" Murray of Hyde Park, who was elected as sticker last Fall, and who is the first Democrat sent to the Legislature from that town in a number of years, is practically sure of re-election. "Dave" is a member of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] by Governor [illegible] father of the [illegible] annexation of Hyde Park [illegible] which will be voted on at the State election Tuesday. [illegible] through a bill providing [illegible] purification of the Neponset River. He is undoubtedly one of the ablest legislators that ever represented [illegible] Park on Beacon Hill.

Law Hits "Touch" Clubs

The anti-corrupt practices act passed by the last Legislature strikes a death blow to [illegible] clubs. Section 3 of chapter 679 of the act provides:

No person or persons [illegible] political committee and no person acting under the authority of a political committee or in [illegible] behalf shall demand, solicit, ask or invite from a person who is a candidate for nomination, or election to public office, or who is occupying an elective public office any payment or gift of money or other valuable thing or promise of payment or gift of [illegible] [illegible] thing for [illegible] [illegible] donations, tickets [illegible] [illegible] or any other [illegible] whatsoever, and no such [illegible] for nomination or election [illegible] one who is occupying an elective public office, shall [illegible] [illegible] or gift or promise [illegible] [illegible] son or persons, political [illegible] [illegible] or any person acting under the authority of a political [illegible] [illegible] if such person or political committee has demanded, solicited [illegible] or invited from him any such payment, gift or promise of payment of gift.

Another section of chapter 679 provides that "whoever is convicted of wilfully violating any provision of law relating to corrupt practices in elections shall be deemed ineligible to [illegible] public office for three years following the date of his conviction."

Voting Machines to Be Voted on.

One of the questions which will appear on the ballot at Tuesday's election and which has practically escaped attention, is the proposed amendment to the State Constitution authorizing the use of voting machines at all elections. This amendment has been passed by two succeeding Legislatures as provided by the Constitution, and if approved and ratified by a majority of the voters will become a part of the State Constitution.

Voting machines are already in use in [illegible] States in the Union. [illegible] of the use of voting [illegible] Massachusetts would assure [illegible] and honest balloting, and speedy and accurate counting of the ballots.

Problem in Taxation

Everybody will not agree with the Good Government Association that the money for permanent improvements should come from the tax levy rather than [illegible] raised by loan.

Councillors Hale and Smith have precedent in their stand that municipal improvements of a lasting nature or of such a class that citizens for the next half century will enjoy them, should not be paid for in their entirety by the present generation.

When the delegation of city officials which visited Chicago some few months ago learned that the municipality paid for all of its new schools just as quickly as they were built with money from the tax levy, there was not one of the Boston visitors to defend the plan.

The pay-as-you-go policy sounds [illegible] and on the surface would appear a sound financial plan to follow, but those who are equally as well informed as the reform organization on municipal matters, and who have given this particular question some consideration, [illegible] [illegible] to condemn it as [illegible] [illegible] method that imposes an unjust burden on the taxpayers of today.

Councillor Hale is preparing a document which will contain facts and statistics that will sustain his stand on the question, and, despite the criticism of the Pemberton Square Association, does not intend to recede from his position.

Frothingham's Break.

Those who know Louis A. Frothingham [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Senator [illegible] rather rusty machine for [illegible] [illegible] long realized that he is not gifted with a nimble tongue when addressing audiences. It remained for [illegible] [illegible] of Peabody to find out for themselves just what relation was between that fact and the workings of the candidate's mind.

"Louie," as he is called at State headquarters, partly because it sounds good and partly because it is a campaign asset, was leading up to what he intended for a peroration. His hand waved impressively and his voice trembled as he besought his [illegible] to go to the polls on election day [illegible] [illegible] Democratic [illegible] [illegible] to Boston." His auditors were dumbfounded and some of them have not yet figured it out whether [illegible] was pulling a joke or was just a victim of tongue twist.

Schofield's Chances Good.

Things are decidedly ripe down in the Third Essex senatorial district for George A. Schofield of Ipswich, a Democratic editor, who is trying to unhorse the genial Jimmie Tolman of [illegible] [illegible] Congressman Gardner's representative on Beacon Hill for the [illegible] [illegible] years.

The Republican machine in the district is badly scared [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] encountered [illegible] [illegible] organization, whose members preach harmony with a club, and who, if they are forced to use salve, first bind the victim and then poke it down his throat. They figure that Senator Tolman is in danger of a bad beating. Schofield won the district once before from the Republicans and this only adds to the terror of the occasion.

As a result of this feeling on the part of the machine leaders some of the men who have [illegible] [illegible] under the [illegible] [illegible] years are really working [illegible] [illegible] Kimball of Newburyport, who as a county commissioner has one of the best things in the district, is hot-footing here and there all over the place, he being the boss. Mr. Flalt, under him and right up near the front [illegible] Charles O. Bailey of Newbury, who has a place in the gypsy moth commissioner's office and may have considerable influence in speaking for jobs for the unemployed during the spraying and pruning season, and who also is an expert judge of the gums and binders and traps used in preventing [illegible] from climbing trees. [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] postmasters [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] two first-class postmasters who are prime operators of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] is the [illegible] Congressman Gardner's private secretary and chief engineer, head pilot, captain and officer of the deck of the whole works. He is here, there and everywhere over the district, pushing things into line for Jimmie. His job [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] alleged leaders hop about in this contest is a caution.

It's the best legislative fight in the whole State where the issue is clear cut and distinct between independent citizenship and machine domination.

Crowley Boss Bell Ringer

The boss bell ringer of this or any subsequent campaign has been discovered. [illegible] [illegible] Timothy Crowley, [illegible] [illegible] councillor [illegible] More than that, he's in earnest about wanting the job and he has the goods consisting of evidence of extravagance and mismanagement on the present county board, which works under the orders of as firmly welded a ring as there is in the State and most of the county rings are pretty solid institutions.

Now, if one will look at the map, he will discover that Berkshire County overlaps a great deal of space, even on a map. When it is remembered that Berkshire is laid out with [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] starts out to walk over it will have his troubles.

[illegible] that's what Mr. Crowley is doing [illegible] [illegible] arguments and printed matter and relating his story to the wife when he can't find the voter of the family and having as good a time with the children as he can.

He has been at the task now since [illegible] [illegible] and met every person who lived along the roads he had [illegible] [illegible] Mr. Crowley expects to be elected.

Grocers for Governor Foss.

F. Fred Vaughan, a wholesale grocer on South Market street, who also finds considerable enjoyment in watching [illegible] brought back tidings of [illegible] the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and the surrounding territory. It was not [illegible] self, though because as it happens he has always [illegible]

Anyone he was in [illegible] was when the high cost of living came up as a topic of discussion in a grocery store. The prevailing opinion in the store was that Governor Foss is right and that prices of foodstuffs would remain higher until the Payne-Aldrich [illegible] [illegible] Democrat. He had always been a Republican. That fact determined [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] he returned to [illegible] astounded to discover that [illegible] or farm were [illegible] in this campaign and that most of them had previously been Republicans.

If You Can't Be Wrong, You Can't Be Right.

By HERBERT KAUFMAN.

Before you make a stand, look over the fence. You may be on the wrong side.

Hear what the other man has to say—he might be right.

You can't form a sure opinion on any person or situation until you know the facts.

Judgment on mere impulse or hearsay is neither sound nor fair.

You can't become a competent partisan solely on the strength of your individual views.

A safe position is doubly fortified when submitted to reason.

If you are not open to conviction it's only because you fear conviction of error.

Until you acknowledge yourself capable of flaws, you aren't fit to espouse a cause. It isn't safe for any man to assume that his reasoning can't be incompetent or inaccurate.

The very fact that you are so strongly set in your notions suggests that you are probably as far out of the way as you believe some one else to be.

Stubborn adherence to an impetuous resolution isn't defense or self-respect. Steadfastness isn't always a sign of character. Omniscience belongs to the Gods. No human brain has always been correct.

So long as you cling bull-headedly to estimates conceived through gossip or prejudice and deny justice in the face of evident right, you are worse than a thief.

To brand innocence with the slur of slander and to withhold opportunity for correction is far more despicable than to steal property. Goods can be replaced, but a good name seldom.

Retraction doesn't lower. It's the hall-mark of a square clean big-souled human—it proclaims the gentleman.

You'll never stand so high as when you frankly admit you have fallen into error.

Ignorance is excusable, but refusal to atone is unthinkable. The man who is wrong and won't grant it is capable of doing worse—hiding his traces.

Investigate yourself before you castigate your neighbor. Put your conscience in the dock and place your motives on trial.

Conscience will judge and be frank enough if you'll listen.

Take stock of your grudges and trace each back to its source. Weigh your dislikes on fair scales. Was there a basis for half the harm you've done?

Take down the Books of Memory and turn back the pages. There now! You're face to face with your recklessness and your thoughtlessness and your meanness.

Here you were bigoted—there you wantonly sacrificed a friend's repute—again you were a cheap Smart Aleck, cruelly blighting a decent name without even a shadow of information.

Time and again you've leered and shrugged away a woman's honor.

And even you blush to think how often you took a side in sheer contrariness and maintained it because your puny, warped code has never permitted you to confess a fault.

* * * * * * * *

Now, go over in a corner and think a long while—then decide whether you are actually vicious or merely an irresponsible ass.

"Calamity" Cry Can't Stop Big Boston Factory

Industrial Leaders Declare for Governor Foss

FAC-SIMILE OF LETTER TELLING OF INDUSTRIAL BOOM IN EAST BOSTON

BOSTON November 1, 1911.

Real Estate Editor,
Boston American,
Boston, Mass

My dear Sir:

As you always seem to be very enterprising in gathering all the important real estate news I enclose you herewith a description of the new factory building now under construction by the East Boston Company, which represents 800 stockholders, showing that the Company proposes to do its share in the development of the business and manufacturing interests of the City.

I enclose you sketch which you might like to produce as the other papers are going to do so and I want you to feel that we give you the first opportunity, in this matter, as we always appreciate what the American has to say.

Again, this is a very good argument that the East Boston Company does not believe that there is any danger of the industries of Massachusetts being wiped out by the election of Mr. Frothingham for Governor. It is right in line of your paper to show that the industries of Massachusetts are not trembling in the balances.

Should you want any further information we shall be glad to give it to you.

Very truly yours.

Pres. James
Treasurer

GJ/MKF

This is really good campaign argument although the East Boston is not in politics. We believe however as individuals in Eugene N. Foss as Governor and for Fort 12 as well

POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT

SPECIAL NOTICE TO
Real Estate Taxpayers and the People

Eugene N. Foss individually pays taxes on real estate in Boston assessed at $1,300,000. Therefore he is vitally interested.

Louis A. Frothingham individually pays no taxes on real estate in Boston, but jointly with another pays on $21,500. How much is he interested?

Politicians have managed the affairs of our State and Nation long enough.
Business men are going to control affairs in the future.

What the People Want is a Business Man for Governor of this Commonwealth

Politicians CONTRACT the bills. Real estate owners and business men PAY them.
Do you know that about 30% of the gross income of your real estate is paid out in taxes?
Real estate at present pays four-fifths of the entire taxes of this Commonwealth. Personal property pays one-fifth.
Real estate is in the open where the assessors can see it for themselves, and it cannot escape taxation. Personal property is hidden under the present system and the rich protected.
If personal property owned by the big interests was properly assessed at anywhere near its value the taxes on real estate would be reduced at least one-half. Think what this means to every poor man that owns his little home
You must remember that not only the real estate owner, but every man who pays rent is paying his share of this tax burden.
Eugene N. Foss has many thousands of dollars invested in various manufacturing plants in Massachusetts, and employs many thousand people
Is it reasonable to think he will do anything to injure any legitimate industry in this State?
The tariff question is a national football and should not be kicked at a State election.
It is time that every man should do his duty
What difference does it make whether a man is a Republican or a Democrat provided he is the right man?
Massachusetts has better opportunities today than any other State, and Boston has more undeveloped natural resources than any other city in the world.

EUGENE N. FOSS has pledged himself to reform the tax system in this State.

The town of Norwood by the efforts of public-spirited citizens increased the taxes value of personal property in one year from $1,250,000 to $2,000,000, thereby cutting the tax rate from $25.60 to $8.00 per thousand.
The same result can be obtained in almost every Town and City in the State

The election of Eugene N. Foss means the immediate and proper development of Boston Harbor, and this great improvement will be of great mutual benefit to the entire Commonwealth as well as all New England.

Don't allow political reasons to prevent you from voting for a business man who is absolutely qualified for the office.

W. J. McDONALD, Real Estate, 81 Harvard Ave., Allston, 95 Milk Street, Boston.

SHORT COVERING SUPPORTS COTTON

Fluctuations Within Narrow Range; Growers' Report May Be 10,000,000 Bales.

By EDWARD LOW RANLETT.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Cotton prices moved within a narrow range last week. The [illegible] of contracts by an extended short interest was the principal support, and [illegible] selling by Southern interests [illegible] a heavy spot situation in that direction. Weather news was unfavorable, with freezing temperatures and rains prevailing over wide areas of the cotton belt. The market, however, made only feeble response to this influence, and was more susceptible to the volume of receipts and estimates of the possible outcome of the ginners' report to be issued on Wednesday.

Estimate 10,000,000 Bales.

This report will cover the period between October 17 and November 1. The two Sundays are excluded and it is estimated that about 190,000 bales per day will cover the total returns for twelve days. The last ginners' returns gave a total of 7,740,000 bales up to October 17, and current estimates for the next report approximate 10,000,000 bales. This total is by far the largest ever known in a similar period, and the market fluctuations recently have been based on this estimate.

Reports from the South show a very large amount of cotton has been picked and stored at farmhouses, awaiting ginning and a market. The campaign having for its object the holding back of cotton for higher prices has been effective in this direction, and the movement of the crop, represented by the receipts at ports and interior towns, gives evidence of the efforts on the part of planters in opposition to lower quotations.

Heavy Covering by Shorts.

[illegible] covering of short commitments. Prices declined Monday to new low records for [illegible] January sold at 8.85, March at 8.90, May to 9.07 and July to 9.17.

For the remainder of the week the market showed a better tone, with prices ranging from 12 to 16 points higher, but at no time [illegible] the short interest was not conspicuous in covering commitments. The strength of the December option was the feature of the week's trading.

This was due entirely to short covering [illegible] visited the northern part of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas cotton and the northern sections of the Eastern cotton belt [illegible]

INCREASE COPPER SURPLUS.

October Output Expected to Show 10,000,000-Pound Gain.

Copper is firm at 12¼c a pound, electrolytic [illegible] quoting that figure. Three of the largest, United Metals Selling, American Smelting and Refining and Phelps-Dodge, have little of the metal for delivery between now and January 1. As yet little January copper has been sold.

For October an increase in United States stocks is expected, but the month's surplus will not be large, 10,000,000 pounds being the outside figure, placed by those interests usually well informed in such matters. Production will of course be larger than the 115,500,000 pounds in September, as October is a thirty-one-day month and it is thought the month's total will be close to 125,000,000 pounds, with a possibility of even a larger showing, as the producers have been lagging behind the Custom House returns so far this year.

[illegible] deliveries should be between 60,000,000 and 65,000,000 pounds, shipments having been good this month. The closing of Lake navigation in the first fortnight in November may have an effect on the October deliveries to which the trade has not given sufficient importance. Following the [illegible] by the Calumet & Hecla in September, there were large sales of Lake copper, and from now on all available Lake copper will be pressed forward for shipment before the ice comes. Lake is quoted at 12¼c a pound, with the demand quiet at the moment.

An increase of 10,000,000 in stocks during September here would mean an increase in world's stocks for the month of approximately 2,000,000 pounds.

CONDITIONS ARE MORE STABLE

Effort Will Be Made to Maintain Strong Price Level; Coppers Strong.

By E. A. WILKINS.

STATE STREET, Nov. 4.—A change for the better has [illegible] the trend of current events. The virtual settlement of the American Tobacco Company's plan of readjustment, more favorable reports from the Steel Industry and the favorable exhibit of current railroad earnings, together with the existence of a large short interest in stocks, all point to more stable market conditions. A fair investment demand has appeared, while the amateur bears who have developed recently find themselves short of both stocks and cash. There never was a time when brokers carried so large a number of short accounts as the present. The trading public has been educated to this sort of thing and is easily induced to sell stocks short with the expectation of buying them back for less money. This has been done to a large extent by people who never dared to take this position in the market, and many find themselves short with no immediate prospects of covering their contracts without incurring a loss.

Bears Have Overstayed Market.

It is proverbial that the public usually finds itself with stocks on hand at the culmination of a bull movement, so that the reverse of this can apply. Some big [illegible] on paper were shown when the market was declining a few weeks ago, but like the holder who overstays the market in bull times, the seller has overstayed and has seen the market come back on him.

Congress convenes in another month and the Stanley investigating committee will soon be heard from again. The Steel [illegible] tor, but for the moment the worst is known. While stock market prices have had a good rally from the low levels, the impression exists that between now and the time of the incoming Congress every effort will be made to gain on a strong [illegible] for prices.

Railroads are entering the market more freely for requirements. The latest is the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy which will take from 20,000 to 27,000 tons of [illegible] [illegible] will soon be in the market with short-time notes and will find ready takers.

Activity Brings Higher Prices.

Any activity in copper shares brings advancing prices, although the market is quite bare of orders. There is a sound foundation for a good copper share market. All that is lacking is leadership. A little concentrated buying would cause a three [illegible] history repeats itself there will be a good old fashioned copper share boom in time. [illegible] have been made, mainly for export. The total for October was about 150,000,000 pounds of which two-thirds was on foreign orders. Some of this is undoubtedly for speculative account. Foreign statistics continue to decrease even though the American supplies show increasing amount.

NEW TAX EXEMPT BONDS.

To Finance Filene's New Store $4,200,000 Is Offered.

The public will shortly be invited to subscribe to the first large lot of tax exempt bonds offered in Massachusetts in several years. This issue is offered through Lee, Higginson & Co., to finance the purchase of land on which Boston's big department store to be occupied by William Filene's Sons & Co., under a thirty-five year lease, will be erected. This building with land will cost $7,100,000 and is to be financed through the issue of [illegible] stock and $4,200,000 [illegible] tax exempt bonds.

All the stock has been subscribed for and the bonds will be offered to investors at [illegible] par, to yield about [illegible] per cent. The bonds are dated July 1st, 1911, and run ten years and are callable at 105 and interest.

The Boston Real Estate Trust of Boston, the issuing company, is formed under Massachusetts laws. The association has acquired over 60 per cent. of the land bounded by Washington, Summer, Hawley and Franklin streets, in the heart of the retail district, and has an agreement to erect a modern eight-story department store building.

The bonds are tax exempt, because they are a first mortgage on real estate. They represent but 60 per cent. of the cost of the property.

It is an interesting fact that the Filene lease will run for about twenty-five years beyond the life of the bonds and that the estimated receipts are nearly double the interest on the bonds. Average net earnings of the trust for the ten years beginning September 1 should be approximately $326,460 per annum against interest requirements of $168,000.

Dividends at the rate of 4½ per cent. are being paid on $2,900,000 stock.

At present 7,600 square feet of the 42,380 square feet owned by the trust are occupied by the Macullar Parker Company under a lease which expires in 1918. After that it is probable that the building now under erection will be enlarged to take in the present Macullar Parker site.

TO DISTRIBUTE SURPLUS.

Butte Coalition Planning Reorganization for This Purpose.

Directors of the Butte Coalition will meet shortly to plan a reorganization of the company for the purpose of effecting a distribution of the cash surplus of approximately $3,800,000 and for materially reducing the company's capitalization, according to a report which has been current for several days.

Officially nothing more is obtainable than this somewhat technical denial, but the action of the company's stock the past week suggests that traders accept the report at its face value. Up to ten [illegible] ago the issue changed hands at 14½, but a full point advance was made by October 31. In the three days since the issue has been sold up to 17.

Butte Coalition is capitalized for $17,000,000, with the par of the stock as $15. It is paying dividends of 25 cents a share quarterly, which equals the dividends it receives on Anaconda stock. Coalition having reached the stage where it is but a holding company whose subsidiaries, having transferred their properties to the Anaconda, have dissolved and distributed their holdings.

Brokers' Views

Henry Clews & Co.—The stock market has been pounded and squeezed more severely than at any time since the panic of 1907. Intrinsic conditions are sound. There is to-day neither overproduction of merchandise nor of securities. Money is abundant [illegible] Prolonged strain and uncertainty has had its usual depressing effect upon the business [illegible] as said trade looks a little worse than they really are. Certainty at this time the situation warrants more cheerful thought and action. The coming elections will afford indications as to which way the political winds are likely to blow in 1912. The returns from New England, where an unusually [illegible] particularly interesting.

J. M. Taylor & Co.—It is axiomatic in financial circles that conditions are never ideal. There has never been a [illegible] And the present time is in no way exceptional. [illegible] of the next twelve months preclude any possibility of a bull market. In addition to the political factor, some people see a necessity for the liquidation of real estate, of labor and of commercial liabilities, and a more extended period of retrenchment [illegible] brings forth two main factors—the reopening of the tariff reduction agitation when Congress reconvenes next month, and the continued activities [illegible] large corporations under the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

Hunt, Ellis & Co.—Although it is cheap sort of optimism which defends inaction on the plea that [illegible] fabric of business. The statement has frequently been reiterated by some of the [illegible] operated so long on a hand-to-mouth basis that a replenishment of supplies can hardly be longer postponed. The particular bright spot appears to be our business with other nations as reflected in the growing balance of trade in our favor.

Hayden, Stone & Co.—With an opportunity to view the Steel prosecution more calmly it becomes evident that it is not an unmixed evil. Its worst effect is the great [illegible] As the tobacco question approaches a settlement it becomes apparent that an adverse decision under the Sherman law may change the form of values, but it does not destroy them. The dissolution of an efficient organization is, we think, a distinct loss, but this is offset in some degree by other considerations. There are many however, who believe that the Steel Corporation has at least an even chance to win. If [illegible] proved on corporations [illegible] the loss and uncertainty that the country has experienced or may yet experience on this account.

H. A. Brown & Co.—The week has seen the commencement of a bull market which we believe will carry prices from 15 to 20 points higher. The suit against the United States Steel Corporation brought a sharp break in that stock, but did not demoralize the general market, proving the strength of the market's position. The quarterly statement of the United States Steel Corporation was better than expected, and the directors declared the usual dividend. This was a favorable influence and another was the absence of any November disbursements were under way. These factors are of small importance however, compared with the developments at the hearing on the Tobacco plan of reorganization.

Wiggin & Elwell.—The rally in the market which has been in progress about six weeks, or since September 27, has brought about a rise of five points in the barometer stocks. Some further rally is likely in certain securities, but we are not bullish except on the [illegible] and would buy only on weak days for moderate profits. The Steel statement for the last quarter was quite satisfactory. However that is apt to be the quarter of the year in which the volume of business is greatest. We believe that the earnings for the next quarter will not be as satisfactory.

Thompson, Towle & Co.—The passing of the election may stimulate business a little and there is for the time being no aggressiveness in the political atmosphere. There is a decided improvement in the textile business. The security markets both stocks and bonds, appear to be in a healthy condition and there is no evidence of that kind of liquidation or selling which indicates lack of confidence by the larger banking interests.

Miller & Co.—The market carries within itself an unwieldy short interest [illegible] which is again offset by fresh contracts for the Fall. Under the circumstances, we look to see prices of the active issues advance to a higher level.

New York Curb Troubles.

The board of representatives of the New York Curb Association yesterday referred to the arbitration committee the case of Fred R. Jones, growing out of alleged failure on the part of Jones [illegible] good on contracts for delivery [illegible] Reinhardt claims is due.

The action of the Curb followed the denial of Justice Pendleton in the Supreme Court of Jones' motion to make permanent the temporary restraining order against his expulsion by the association. Jones asserted he wanted only a trial before the association in accord with its rules [illegible] Pendleton, in denying the motion, also said that the hearing be held under the Curb's rules, adding that if not held the injunction would be granted.

October Curb Sales.

Total Boston curb sales for October were 707,806 shares. Amalgamated Nevada led with 124,844 shares and Porcupine Northern followed with 119,260. Porcupine Southern had 67,596 shares. Bay State Gas 63,745, Cactus 63,035, Corbin 50,525, Rhode Island Coal 38,495, and Majestic 14,073 shares.

STOCKS ARE STRONG THE CLOSE OF WEEK

Steel Is Strong and American Tobacco Jumps on Report of Reorganization.

By THOMAS C. SHOTWELL.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4.—Stocks were buoyant in Wall street to-day with Reading, Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific the leaders. Steel was strong around the high price of the previous session. Reading was the most active of all stocks, and its advance covered three points. Blocks of thousands of shares changed hands in single transactions.

Bank clearings for the week showed a material increase. Mail order business was much larger. Railroad earnings continue around high levels. The public also bought considerable stock in small lots and the upward movement is beginning to acquire a following. The New York bank statement showed a material increase in loans.

American Tobacco advanced to 480 on the curb as the result of a report that the United States Circuit Court would make official announcement Monday of the plan of reorganization, and this plan would be very favorable to the common stockholders.

Material Advance for Week.

Wall street celebrated apparent adjustment of American Tobacco Company affairs this week with a material advance in prices of all stocks. A 'quarterly statement of [illegible] the Steel Trust also helped the advance because it was much better than expected. Speeches of President Taft denouncing the corporations for law breaking and threatening to dissolve them because of it had no [illegible] settlement must begin some important litigation soon in pursuance of President Taft's plan.

Announcement came that the Stanley [illegible] its hearings on November 10. The Stanley committee is expected to inquire particularly into the relations existing between the railroads and the steel corporation. Particular attention will be paid to this relationship at the time of the 1907 panic in Wall street. The Interstate Commerce Commission is expected to begin action soon against railroads and the steel trust on the charge of rebating.

Wall street considers the tobacco dispute settled because the objections made to the [illegible] Attorney General Wickersham were not displeasing to the insiders. The reason this settlement is celebrated so [illegible] leaves the insiders as fully [illegible] tobacco industry as they were before the government brought its suit. It is argued from this that the government will be powerless to enforce competition in any industry and therefore the dissolution suits will amount to nothing. In connection with the Steel trust there is a distinct belief in financial circles that the government will lose its suit entirely because it had made charges that cannot be proved. The steel petition is considered a political stump speech.

One of the peculiar movements of the week was a raid on American Smelting stock. This raid had all the appearance of a deliberate shake-out by insiders, for immediately after the collapse the stock turned strong, and was a market leader at the end of the week. Pacific Telephone advanced sharply on rumors of a dividend in the near future.

"Justice to the Farmer."

All the prominent railroads are taking part in the land show in New York city. The motto of this exposition is "Back to the Farm," but Dr. Wiley suggests that a better motto would be "Justice to the Farmer."

Dr. Wiley holds that it is not necessary to persuade farmers to produce more as it is to get them a fair price for what they produce. He says they could increase the harvest indefinitely if they could get their shares of the price that the actual consumer pays for farm products. He wants the middle man eliminated. The consumer pays enough for food to furnish magnificent profits to the farmer if the price of food could be distributed in a fair way between the producer and the distributor.

FAILURES OF STOCK SPECULATORS FEW

Elements of Success Include the Finest of Impalpable Calculations.

By BOERSIANER.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—There are fewer failures among stock speculators than in any other business. This statement is not a loose generality, but may be verified at the offices of the commercial agencies. By stock speculator is not meant the merchant, the tradesman or the professional man who telephones an occasional order to a commission house, nor yet the more or less permanent occupant of a chair facing the quotation board in a brokerage house. The term is applied exclusively to the operator on the floor of the stock exchange, to the active member who has no commission to pay, who is on the spot where prices are made to seize every varying shade of opportunity.

There is no place where the calculations are so fine as on the Bourse or where they are employed on data so impalpable and so little immersed in matter. The story is true that a floor trader made hundreds of thousands of dollars by continued trading in the shares of a railway and then one day asked what part of the country the railway traversed. The whole thing had been a series of algebraic quantities to him, which called up no picture to him, but which affected only a profit and loss account.

Process Makes Mind Ache.

In most kinds of business there is an appeal of some sort to palpability; there is merchandise in ships or machines. Even in banking there is much physical money to be counted. But the stock exchange deals in the promises of companies and nations, in the shares of undertakings whose values depend on expectations.

What these expectations are to be is a matter of subtle calculation from the past and intuition of the future. These elements of trade cannot be seen or handled, and the dealing with them trains the mind to a refinement analogous to that of the metaphysician.

The ordinary man can concept finds a great rest in fixing it on a concrete object, but the stock trader has no such means of repose. He must make his mind [illegible] on what he can never [illegible] out all its [illegible] qualities.

An operator loses money and in the end is ruined if he omits any or miscalculates any of the leading impalpable components. If any man of business is to turn abstract thinker, this is the one that should do so. A careful follower of a man like Harry Content or Barney Baruch, who knows anything of such matters and who watches the anxious penetrations with which they follow [illegible] minutiæ, will often say to himself:

"I see well why these men made a fortune on the stock exchange. For this trade they have had the best preparation, the preparation of race. Both are Jews, and for ages the Jews have shown a marked excellence of what may be termed the 'commerce of imperceptibles.' They have no decided superiority outside of finance; other people are quite their equal in dealing with ordinary merchandise, in machine making or manufacturing. But the Jews as a rule excel on the Bourse, they and Christian descendants of their blood, owe pre-eminence no doubt, owing to the peculiarly forced training of the race, for they were impelled by the nations where they have lived to concentrate their minds on money, an occupation up to a couple of centuries ago deemed degrading. To-day the world's opinion on the subject has changed somewhat.

Speculator Must Concentrate.

But even the man whose ancestors have prepared him for money matters, for intense concentration, must be constantly in the room where markets are made, to be successful; must be continually in the atmosphere. He cannot divide his attention. A factory, a store or a profession, lessens the chances of profits on the Bourse. Hence the popular legend that speculating in stocks inevitably leads to loss. On the [illegible] stocks by the professional stock speculator almost always ends in gain. But one must be in the place where the prices are made, must have fine calculation and some intuition. A little luck, also, will do no harm.

HOW TO BUY U. S. BONDS.

Announced that Postal Deposits Can Be Converted Jan. 1.

The Postoffice Department at Washington has issued instructions to depositors as to how to turn their deposits into United States bonds paying 2½ per cent. interest a year, half of 1 per cent. more than the ordinary postal deposit interest. Every depositor in the postal savings banks in any postoffice where depositories have been [illegible] the whole or a part of his deposits January 1, 1912, for bonds which will be registered or of the coupon variety as the depositor wishes and which will be issued in denominations of $20, $100 and $500.

The interest is payable every six months. Applications for the conversion of deposits into bonds on January 1 must be received December 15, 1911, at the depository where the certificates were issued. Postal savings deposits converted into bonds are not [illegible] as a part of the maximum of $500 allowed one depositor, and there is no limit to the amount of available postal savings bonds that may be acquired by a depositor. The bonds will be issued only to postal savings depositors, but they may be sold or assigned to anyone.

Improvement in Business.

We have interviewed, say Messrs. Thompson, Towle & Co., a number of important business [illegible] and have been surprised at the general [illegible] of good business.

[illegible] the American Woolen Company reports the best business for a long time, with [illegible] per cent. of the company's machinery [illegible]

[illegible] the largest wholesale shoe houses with salesmen [illegible] reports steadily improving business, with September the best month of the year and October promising to exceed September.

A head salesman for one of the largest dry goods houses reports September and October business the [illegible]

Business men report that stocks of goods the country wide are so small that actual necessities to meet the demands of 100,000,000 people are responsible for the good fall business.

Government's Enforcement.

Summarizing the results to date of the government's enforcement of the Sherman law, it appears that the two big combines which have thus far been compelled to undergo dissolution and reorganization have suffered pretty severely therefrom. The American Tobacco Co., according to its own estimate, expects to lose $2,000,000 as a result of its reconstruction as well as the loss of prestige in the tobacco trade and although the Standard Oil Co. has remained on this point it is not greatly inured at the decision and reorganization forced upon it, even though the dissolution has not proved as disastrous as it was originally expected.

METAL EXCHANGES.

The New York metal markets were dull as usual Saturday. Lake Copper, 12¾@12¾; electrolytic, 12¾@12½, and castings, 12¼@12⅜. Tin, 40.60@41.25. Lead, 4.25@4.30. Spelter, 6.30@6.50. Antimony, Cookson's, 8.00@8.12½. Iron unchanged.

CHICAGO WHEAT PIT HAS A HARD WEEK

Genuine Scare Among Cash Holders Over Government's Investigation.

By JOSEPH F. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO, Nov. 4.—The wheat market has undergone a severe [illegible] during the week, the December option selling down from 99⅝ to 93⅛, the May from $1.04⅛ to 99½ cents and the July from [illegible] to 94⅛. [illegible] was the leading [illegible] genuine scare among the [illegible] on rumors that the government would investigate the [illegible] market to ascertain if a conspiracy existed.

Millions of bushels of No. 2 red Winter wheat were thrown upon the bargain counters on the cash side of the Board of Trade. With each purchase by millers was a guarantee that there would be no losses on that [illegible] futures would be taken off [illegible] of the cash article.

Cash Wheat Holders Beaten

The large holders of cash wheat at Chicago have suffered [illegible] trimmings ever administered in the [illegible] Their line was taken in and [illegible] on May contracts, and they had [illegible] carry this wheat, but there will be no demand for it at any time. Many in the trade believe that wheat is [illegible] is largely held by those [illegible] it into flour, and the bar [illegible] now available will at no [illegible] selling pressure, because [illegible] milling demand for it [illegible] of the United States. Much of the wheat now held in the Southwest as well as the new crop of Spring wheat, has been hedged in the Chicago pit, and any change in conditions must necessarily be a change for the better.

As to sentiment traders are likely to follow any pronounced buying or selling. Exporters were in the market for cash wheat at Chicago, but the amount of their takings was not made public, although they were said to have been liberal at the bottom prices.

Corn has many friends among the large speculators on the Board of Trade, and unless the country enters the market as a freer seller of cash grain prices are likely to advance.

United States Controls Corn.

The United States is now in control of the world's corn markets for the reason that Argentine will not be able to furnish any grain to the importing countries before the middle of May and Russia and other corn-growing nations cannot produce enough corn to make any trouble here before the surplus stock of the present crop has been worked off.

The strongest speculators are holding oats, and prices will depend on the demand for the cash grain and the receipts at Chicago and elsewhere.

To Shoe Manufacturers

The Boston News Bureau is endeavoring to secure your opinion of the

as formed by your business relations with them. We have addressed to all shoe manufacturers, so far as we could secure their names, the questions given below.

Several hundred replies have been received, a summary of which will shortly appear in the Boston News Bureau. If you have not replied to these questions you are earnestly requested to do so at once, in order that our canvass may be as complete as possible

Your replies and anything you have to say pro or con United Shoe Machinery will be treated as confidential as you may desire

The questions are as follows:

1. How long have you had business relations with the United Shoe Machinery Company?
2. Have your relations with them been satisfactory to you?
3. In your opinion, has the United Shoe Machinery Company benefited the shoe manufacturer?
4. If so, are you of opinion that equal benefit could have been had with the shoe machinery business less concentrated?
5. In your opinion, has the United Shoe Machinery Company made it possible to lower the cost of manufacturing shoes, with consequent saving to the consumer?
6. If so, are you of opinion that equal saving could have been made with the shoe machinery business less concentrated?
7. Do you agree with President Winslow that machinery is the only item of cost in the manufacture of shoes which is lower today than in 1899, when United Shoe Machinery Company was formed?
8. If so, do you think the United Shoe Machinery Company is responsible?
9. Do you object to the royalty basis of leasing machines from the United Shoe Machinery Company?
10. Do you think the royalties charged by the United Shoe Machinery Company are unreasonable, considering quality of service rendered?
11. If you bought all your machines outright, do you think the cost per pair of shoes manufactured would be more than under present conditions?
12. Do you agree with President Winslow that United Shoe Machinery Company's return on its capital invested is not as large proportionately as the return received by successful manufacturers of shoes?
13. Do you think the United Shoe Machinery Company has discouraged the invention of new machinery in order that its own machines might not be superseded?
14. Do you believe that disintegration of the company would be followed by increased cost of operation, and would therefore mean that price of shoes at retail would have to be raised?

We have already received many personal letters from shoe manufacturers all over the country, which will be published during November as space permits

A Summer Palace for Our Presidents

How Colorado Proposes to Build on a High Mountain Top a Great Granite Castle to Be the Nation's Capitol When the Hot Months Come.

A CAMPAIGN has been started by the leading citizens of Colorado to provide the President of the United States with a beautiful Summer home in that State. The house is to be a veritable palace of most original and picturesque design, the like of which does not exist in this country. All the details of the plan have been perfected. The movement was started by John Brisben Walker, and a committee of prominent men is now in charge of it.

It is argued that this Summer residence would be the best possible thing for the President's health, and also show proper recognition to the people of the West.

The proposed home is on Mount Falcon, fifteen miles from Denver, in the front range of the Rockies. Large pictures of the palace as planned, with a request for contributions, have been mailed to people all over Colorado. The plan is to make the gift a token from the people of the entire State.

Money has been secured to put in the foundations and ground has been broken, but the fund is not yet completed. Mr Walker believes the building will be constructed in time for the next Summer season and will seek to urge upon President Taft the desirability of spending the heated term in the West, despite the political possibilities of a busy year.

The proposed house will be unique in many ways and exceedingly attractive. The view that its site commands is the strongest feature, and it is this that was urged in making a choice of sites. The fund was started by subscriptions from leading bankers and business men in Denver, and Mr Walker endeavored to arrange that the President visit the site during his one day in Denver and the vicinity. This was impossible, because train delays caused a shortening of the programme.

The President was apprised of the Summer home plan while at Denver, and smilingly said that he believed that no locality could offer finer natural attractions for a Summer capital.

Mount Falcon is one of the most beautiful scenic spots within a short distance of Denver. Its magnificent rocks are softened by beautiful lichens. The plan for the Summer home provides for the use of gray granite, contrasting with the setting for the building. The house will provide ample room for the President's attendants and assistants. Automobiles would bring the Summer capital within forty minutes of Denver.

Of the beauties of the place a poet who has camped there says: "I have come to regard Mount Falcon as the most beautiful spot on the continent of which I have any knowledge. Night and morning on Mount Falcon are like the beginning of creation. It is so different from the rest of the world that it seems as if one were in a fairyland of colors. A hundred tiny lakelets of quicksilver come into view as the sun rises over the limitless plains to the east, at evening these change to turquoise, or rose color, or emerald as the sky may reflect.

"From the north terrace of Mount Falcon, upon which the drawing room and library will open, the steep mountain side, wooded with pines, drops down two thousand feet into the rushing waters of Bear Creek; to the south, seventy-five miles away, is Pike's Peak. Fourteen miles to the northeast is Denver; a passing cloud has covered the city with shadow; the plains seem as bare of houses as when the first prairie schooner slowly struggled across the sands of Cherry Creek. Suddenly the sunlight pierces through the clouds, and a great city stands revealed, its windows reflecting the glories of the setting sun—the golden dome of the Capitol and the tall Campanile of Sixteenth street glistening in the sunlight.

"At night as one stands on the mountain top in the twilight the twinkling lights of the city come out, one by one, until presently they rival the stars in brilliancy, and for ten miles the plains are aglow. But the chief glory of Mount Falcon lies to the west. Here the granite cliffs drop down perpendicularly for five hundred feet into a little valley covered with soft pines and quaking aspens. Thence the eye follows a succession of green mountain ledges rising up, one after the other, until their climax in the snowy range. As the sun goes down in the west this vast sweep of beauty becomes a very kaleidoscope of scenic effects—the sky above opalescent or turquoise, the hundred ridges shading their greens from the bright [illegible] the mountain meadows to the dark pines, down [illegible] they disappear in the deep sepia shadows.

"Turning again to the east one looks down [illegible] a toy village nestled in the beautiful Mount Morrison Valley."

The architect who has drawn up the plans of this palace is James B. Benedict, a graduate of the Paris School of Beaux Arts. He was for some time associated with the firm of Carrere & Hastings, of New York, who designed the New York Public Library and other great buildings.

LOST—Fourteen Years and a Wife!

Tragic Dilemma of a Youthful Bride Whose Husband's "Shift of Identities" Makes Him Now a Man Who Never Married!

Seattle, Wash., Nov. 1.

"NO use—I can't pick up any of those fourteen years that dropped out of my life when the doctors lifted that bit of bone out of my skull.

"Isn't it enough to send anybody up in the air and keep him there? Here I lie on a hospital bed with a silver lid over a hole in my head, waited on by a 'wife' I never saw before, and with people dropping in to ask how 'George Kelly' is getting along—'George Kelly,' of Seattle, well-known citizen—when all I know about myself is that I'm Chan Rogers, 'way back in 1897, when a New York thug batted me over the ear and threw me into the Hudson River."

In all the records of "submerged personalities," say the surgeons who operated on George Kelly, there is no parallel to this case—no such hopelessly complete blotting out of the whole latter half of a man's life.

George Kelly, who came to Seattle a year ago last July with honorable discharge papers which showed that he had served eleven years in the United States Navy, who invested several thousand dollars of savings so well that he is worth a tidy little fortune, who had worked industriously in a lumber mill at Port Blakeley, and who two months ago married Miss Agnes McFarnald, wandered off into the woods two weeks ago.

When found he was delirious and partly paralyzed. Taken to the Providence Hospital, Seattle, the surgeons discovered a depression in the skull above the right ear, evidently the result of an old wound. To the increasing pressure on the brain of the depressed bit of bone they attributed his condition.

They operated successfully, relieving the tortured brain—but marvellously, also, blotting out all the years that had elapsed since the original injury and leaving the patient just where he was on losing consciousness from it fourteen years before.

When Kelly awakened from the effects of the anesthetic his mind was clear—but he was again a boy of seventeen. His young wife had been called into the room and was leaning over, smoothing his brow. He pushed her away, demanding

"Who is this woman?"

"Why, George," she said, hurt and alarmed, "it is Agnes, your wife."

Kelly laughed. "My wife! Go away. You're some Broadway soubrette. Oh! but my head aches!"

"Oh, George!" exclaimed his wife, "don't you recognize me? We were married only two months ago by the Presbyterian minister—and we've been so happy"——

"Presbyterian minister," repeated the convalescent, angrily, "and I a good Catholic! Go away. Send for Father Doherty."

Then, while the doctor and his wife stared at him wonderingly, he went on. "Send for my sister, too. She is Miss Florence Donels, No. 418 West Thirty-second street." He fell back on his pillow, adding: "And notify Silver Dollar Smith—he'll come a-running."

One of the doctors who had practised in the East began to understand, and said: "Those places are in New York Now, Kelly, just rest quietly"——

"Of course they are in New York," said the patient, sitting up again. And then, suspiciously: "Say, where am I, anyhow?"

"In the Providence Hospital, Seattle, Washington," they told him. "Now, Kelly"

"Why do you keep on calling me Kelly?" demanded the patient, now thoroughly excited. "And what am I doing in Seattle? I'm Chandler Rogers, of New York City. Ask Silver Dollar Smith, or any of the West Side gang. Don't talk stuff about Seattle. Now I remember. I and my chum took a couple of girls to the theatre on Fourteenth street last night. We took 'em home after the show, and as I was walking along toward my grandmother's place, on West Thirty-second street, a man jumped out from the shadows and asked me for a match.

"'Go on,' says I, 'I'm no match factory.' And then he hit me over the ear with a billy. He and his gang must have thrown me into North River then, for I remember swimming to a dock—yes, and then I went off my head, for that's the last I remember. But that was last night. Oh! but my head aches."

Although his papers showed that he had served eleven years in the United States Navy, he knew nothing about the Spanish-American War.

During his two years in Seattle he had ridden to from his work on trolley cars, yet the Broadway cable system was a fresh marvel to him.

Less than a month ago he helped promote an aviation meet, yet when a doctor spoke of recent feats of the bird men he winked knowingly at the supposed effort to "string" him.

At length, when Kelly was strong enough to bear the shock, the doctors explained to him his condition and the lapse of years of which he had no consciousness, and proved the latter by showing him the date—1911—on a current daily newspaper.

At first the shock dazed him. "Fourteen years—lost—fourteen years!" he muttered over and over again. Finally he burst into tears and wept himself to sleep.

There is no doubt that, legally, Chandler Rogers can retain the property amassed by "George Kelly." Luckily, there is no other wife—married before the original personality was "submerged"—to complicate the situation, as in the case of George Scott, a wealthy lumberman of Vancouver, B. C., who woke up similarly to forgetfulness of his present wife and remembrance of one he had married years ago in Scotland.

On recovering his original personality Scott sailed to Scotland to discover whether his first wife still lived, while the one married in his forgetful period brought suit for divorce. The two instances combined provoke the interesting query:

"If a dual personality can legally claim property amassed by either of those personalities during the submergence of the other, why may not two wives, in equity, claim him as husband, each having kept faith married a different personality during a submergence of the other?"

Mrs. Agnes Kelly Whose Husband Has Forgotten Fourteen Years of His Life Including His Marriage to Her.

"He raised himself from his bed—'Who is this woman?' he asked. 'She is your wife!' he answered." 'I never saw that woman before!'

"Who Is That Woman?" "Your Bride of 2 Months!"

By Chandler Rogers—Dead Fourteen Years!

JUST suppose it happened to you—you woke up after having a bit of bone lifted off your brain, and you have been told that you're not a lad of seventeen but a man of thirty-one. And you have to try and realize that you've had a career of fourteen years as another man, without a solitary fag end of a memory of any happening in all that long period to cling on to!

Wouldn't you be dazed? Wouldn't you be shocked half to death? And wouldn't you mourn with bitter tears that absolute blotting out of the best third of your lifetime?

The worst shock of all to me was to see a perfectly strange woman at my bedside, and when I asked, "Who is that woman?" to be told "Your wife of two months."

Heavens! And she a perfect stranger to me. She full of the love and affection of a good, wedded wife, and I with no feeling toward her at all but one of resentment that a strange woman should be bothering me at a time when I was tortured with troubles of my own which few men in this world have ever experienced.

The first thing I intend doing when I am able to leave the hospital is to find out all I can about this marriage to Agnes McFarnald, a Renton girl, some three years from Scotland, I am told. Of course, her statement, the documentary evidence, the word of the officiating clergyman and others, with all details of the affair I must now accept as true.

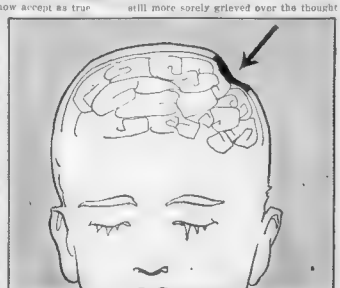
In spite of all this, I don't feel that I am married to her. The whole thing is a farce to me, though I have not the least doubt in the perfection of it, and that which puzzles me and distresses me more too, is the fact that I was married by a Presbyterian—the ceremony performed by a Presbyterian minister, when I was baptized and raised at least until seventeen years of a Catholic! In my sense I never could have been married by anyone save a priest. The marriage may be lawful, but as a Catholic I cannot say that I am married.

Why, I came back to consciousness following the operation, and, opening my eyes, beheld standing over me this young woman who is, in law, my wife, I said to myself:

"Here is a stranded Broadway soubrette. I wonder what she is doing here."

Such were my thoughts. I was a boy again on Broadway. So imagine my astonishment when, in answering my questions, she insisted that she was my wife and wanted to kiss me. I would not permit her to caress me, and this seemed to break the poor girl's heart.

I have wept bitterly at the thought of having lived fourteen years without ability to recall a single word, act or incident in my life during that long period. Yet I am still more sorely grieved over the thought of my marriage and the consequences. I do not know what to do.



The Depression on Kelly's Skull Which Changed Him Fourteen Years Ago Into Another Man and, Being Married, Now Changes Him Back Again.

Certainly I do not wish to wrong the young woman—my wife. Yet I cannot bring myself to the point—just now at least—of saving I will resume the marriage relation with her. It is most embarrassing to her—it is equally so to me. Still, we may marry over again. Before I reach a decision however, I shall talk over the matter with priests of the Providence Hospital. I want to hear what they think and consider my duty under the strange circumstances.

How the Matador "Cut Out" the King

Madrid, Oct. 28.

A KING and a bullfighter rivals for the smiles of a beautiful dancer—and the bullfighter wins!

In Spain, of all countries, this is a most extraordinary reversal of the usual. Not only is it an ordinary occurrence for the King to exhibit with costly gifts and flattering personal attentions his admiration for the reigning stage beauty, but almost invariably such royal favors make the recipient oblivious to the existence of other men.

Up to quite recently ladies of the stage for whom King Alfonso exhibited his admiration and approval were inaccessible to the attentions of all would be suitors of less rank. Such was the situation in the cases of Julieta Fons and the dancer "La Fornarina," who brought considerable criticism upon the monarch's head by indiscreetly parading the facts of his gifts and his royal attentions.

The recent exception to the customary situation was a rather obscure music hall artiste, whose beauty and unusual feminine charm were about all that lifted her above her professional class. Certainly she was most lovely to look upon—the daughter of an Englishman, though Spanish-bred—Francesca Albiona.

For Alfonso to once set eyes upon this English-Spanish actress was for him to forget all about "La Fornarina." He went often to see her perform, and, in the usual way with kings, expressed his admiration.

But the new favorite remained curiously reserved, apparently unimpressed by the King's sentiments. For a week or so the mystery was a most tantalizing one with Madrid society. But it was presently solved in a most unexpected manner.

Francesca Albiona, Who Prefered a Bull Fighter to a King.

The English beauty was in love with a hero of the bull ring! None other than Machaquito, the great matador, who acknowledged but one professional rival—the equally great Bombino. That was why the new beauty had only her most frosty smiles for her admiring sovereign!

But how could an actress's heart long stand between her and the triumph of being a King's favorite? To the vast astonishment of all in court circles, the matador dared to accept the actress's preference for himself, slinging her out for his lowest bow from the bull ring boldly courting her in the very face of Alfonso's rivalry.

Cynical observers could not believe that Machaquito's success could long continue with such powerful opposition, though all Spain knew that this matador never entered the ring for less than $1,200, and that during the twelve years of his career he had accumulated a fortune of nearly half a million.

The exciting denouement came recently, following the matador's narrow escape from death in the ring, in the presence of his sweetheart. After killing two bulls, the third caught and tossed him high in the air. As usual, the feminine portion of the audience looked upon the incident as a matter of course—all but the English beauty, who promptly fainted, and did not wholly regain her reason until Machaquito sent a love note assuring her that he was uninjured.

The following week the news of their marriage and her retirement from the stage caused a sensation—for the King apparently had not relaxed his attentions. Behold! a King had been outrivaled by a bullfighter—with an actress's smile as the grand prize!

"The Man I Married Is Worse Than Dead!"

By Mrs. George Kelly.

MY position is terrible—it is almost driving me crazy. The man I married, and whom I love dearly, is worse than dead.

Though we have been two months married—a marriage of true love on both sides—and spent the happiest honeymoon conceivable, here am I, his wife, yet the veriest stranger to him.

Never shall I forget that scene in the hospital, when he regained consciousness after the operation on his head that blotted out all his life in which I had any part, and caused him to resent my presence with those awful words: "Who is this woman?"

Even now, when he has become convinced that he wooed and won, and married, and lived happily with me as my husband, my situation is as sad as ever. He means well—but it is as though we had never met, except as strangers.

Ah! I know and can feel is that I am married to George. He is my husband in the eyes of God and under the laws of man, and I love him with all the affection of a wife.

It kills me now to think that he now has no recollection of me; still worse, of his marriage to me. In his changed mental condition I am now seemingly a stranger to him, though as sweetheart and husband he seemed to have all the affection for me that any woman could wish.

Now it is all changed. I am powerless to make him love me. I cannot force myself upon him and I cannot give him up. Oh! Oh! I don't know what we shall do. I have done no wrong. He has done no wrong. Yet we are seemingly separated possibly forever.

Our marriage was a lawful one, but its regularity does not carry affection under his changed mental condition. To me he is the same. It is the man I love and worship—not his name.

But with him it is different. Seemingly I do not arouse in him a spark of affection, yet I am still the woman he loved so tenderly when under different mental conditions. It breaks my heart to think of our changed relations. If given the opportunity I will try to win his affections, but I cannot compel him to love me.

"Other People's Fashions"

The Crinoline Over-Skirts, the Wicked Slit Skirt, the Old Victorian Frills—and Some Danger Signals on the New Fashion Road

The Threat of the Crinoline. A New Paris Model with Wide Half-Length Hoop Skirt Effect.

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, presenting all that is newest and best in styles for well-dressed women

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

HERE [illegible] to talk [illegible] shirts either [illegible] but, [illegible] [illegible] where last month I could only discover [illegible] at their worst?

Everything was hopelessly exaggerated and the most extreme styles of all were worn by the very women [illegible] whom they were most ill-suited and, therefore, unbecoming. It, middle-aged dames by the score there were who had encased their stiffly corseted, but still massive bodies in skimpy skirts, while being made in high-waisted effects and finishing directly under the bust and blouse gave them the appearance of sitting in and overflowing a barrel!

Arms protruding from the other end of these same barrels were thick-set, stodgy ankles and ungainly feet, whose size was still further accentuated by a contrast of color between shoe and stocking, the whole ill-proportioned edifice being crowned by an enormous hat which hid the neck and sometimes even broke into and disfigured the line of the shoulders.

And there is, as I hinted, every prospect of things becoming worse, for, instead of devoting their best energies and ideas to giving further variety to the present and pretty styles—and therefore making them possible for the great majority instead of merely for the fortunate and fascinating minority—some of our leading modistes are doing things which I consider unworthy of their name and fame, and, in order to cause a merely passing sensation, are creating and countenancing positive atrocities of attire!

There is, for one, the tailored costume which allies the briefest of coats to the tightest of skirts, so cut, in fact, that the curves of the figure at the back are followed and accentuated in a way which only succeeds in being entirely unaintly, though I presume that their wearers will flatter themselves that they are being exceedingly and fascinatingly improper

Well, one can perhaps forgive impropriety which is just delicately suggested and therefore alluringly attractive, but there is no such excuse for the bold, hard outlines of these latest and unlovellest tailor costumes

Then, again, another "freak" fashion actually introduces two encircling flounces of black lace on a skirt of green mirror velvet, worn with a little velvet coat, there being, indeed, a positive epidemic of this particular trimming, which is, of course, all right in its place, though in my opinion this place is with our fear departed great-grandmothers or, at any rate, with our old aunts or any elderly dames who have solved the difficult problem of how to grow old gracefully by dressing in a dignified and picturesque way

Again, for the furore for fringe I have no sympathy, especially as it is being used without the slightest discrimination, some people, indeed, seeming afraid to turn out a model which does not display this so-called stamp of novelty

Horrible, I call it, and so I, for one, shall have the courage of my opinions and use black lace not at all, while as to fringe, I shall, in the present as in the past, reserve it for the edging of sashes and the making of tassels, perhaps, too, giving it one further chance by admitting it as a possible and—when quite narrow—even pretty trimming for hats.

But, indeed, it is for furnishing rather than sartorial purposes that fringe secures my entire approval, its effectiveness as a narrow edging for inner silken curtains of emerald green or hyacinth blue—whose brilliant coloring it faithfully reflects being proved by many of the window draperies in my Paris house and in my own flat, too, where always a few there are outer curtains of softly patterned tissue or chintz

However, in all this, please understand that I do not wish or attempt to dictate—I merely state my personal opinion, and, of course, follow and emphasize it in all my own models.

So on this understanding I will further proceed to affix a danger signal to three other day and evening gowns, whose slitting up from hem to knees, and sometimes even to the hips at one side of the skirt is relied upon to create a vogue, or at any rate a sensation, by two clever sisters, whose fame has hitherto been based upon a more praiseworthy foundation—and fashion-Day gowns are looped up with tassels, to show deep and daringly transparent borderings of flouncings of lace, the incongruity and ungracefulness of the arrangement being made all the more glaring by the fact that the bodice part of these dresses reverts to the tight-fitting and long-waisted style and is finished off with very bika coat-ban l trimmed with fringe or edged with a tulle ruche, all of which details are in themselves quite fatal alike to comfort and charm. By the way have you realized the close connection between these two qualities?

The waist line in the normal position—the whole outline, in fact, of that natural and easy grace suggested by the very name and insured by the shape of the "statue corset"—still constitutes my ideal figure, while as regards the high and trimmed collar band, I beg of you all to beware of it, for it can, and does, add at least ten years to any woman's apparent age.

The down-turned collar of mellow-toned lawn or lace, or the corsage cut in a deep round or V, remain a feature of all my models, and I invite you to study with careful and even cruel closeness the contrast between the contour of your face and neck, as springing freely from such a setting, and and as, on the contrary, encased in a high, closely-fitting and possibly bejewelled collar band, which pushes up every atom of superfluous flesh and fat into a hateful fullness and heaviness about your jaw and chin. And then I know quite well what form of neckwear you will choose

Next, as to the aforementioned and slit-up evening gowns, whose leg display is continued far above the knee, what can I, or, indeed, need I, say, about these, seeing that they are so obviously and entirely unsuited to ordinary wear, and that, moreover, no man worthy of the name would permit his wife or daughter to appear in public thus attired—or, rather, thus disrobed'

For as shown by the manikins at one famous house, these gowns only veil the silk-stockinked left leg which is usually selected for such display—by the merest film of net or echweshy lace, while some, again, introduce a transparency of lace on the front from the knees to the ankles;

Two Horrible Examples and a Contrast.

The Modest Outline of a New "Lucile" Model.

The Grotesque Outline of One of the New Walking Costumes.

and actually, too, there is at least one model which gives a back view of the wearer's nether limbs by the introduction of a sort of window curtain of lace to the skin-tight sheath of velvet, which, being continued for all the length of the skirt in front gives an amusingly accidental effect to this unexpected development and display.

It is all, indeed, calculated to disgust rather than to allure, for once more let me impress upon you the fascination of the mere suggestion, which makes one look and look again, by always giving just a hint and a hope of the further revelations which are never forthcoming! But when all is shown and, in fact, forced upon one's view at the first glance, all further interest is sacrificed to an immediate and merely momentary sensation (and not an entirely pleasant one, either), so that, to put the matter on its very lowest level, the new skirt defeats its own and only possible aim

There are, in fact, only two points about the slit-up evening gown in which it is preferable to the day dresses thus designed and disfigured, these being the addition of a slight train which makes a background for the limbs deprived of their ordinary covering in front, and then again, the further following in their straight, high-waisted line of the marvellieuse and Directoire modes, which, in the case of the long-waisted, high- collared afternoon gowns, are merely parodied

Why the German Grown Prince Cannot Go Hunting Again

THE Crown Prince of Germany and his wife will go on no more hunting expeditions in the wilds of India, if the German Reichstag has anything to say. It was all very fine for these young people to take their trip through India, China and the Far East last year, and they had a good time, bringing back many trophies of the hunt, which decorate their palace in Berlin—but "Never again!"

Of course, every precaution was taken to keep the royal pair out of danger, but one more than one occasion the least slip of a hunting elephant, or one spring of an enraged tiger, and the heir to the German throne would have been no more,

The statesmen of Germany have given some thought to this matter and they have decided that it is taking too great a risk, so now when the Prince wishes to go hunting it will be in the game preserves of his own country, where the game is driven up to him, and that game is not very dangerous. It may not be so exciting as hunting tigers in India, but is far safer for the Empire, and that is the chief consideration with the public men of Germany

It has even been suggested that some laws should be passed to prevent the heir to the throne from taking such unnecessary risks, for one mistake or miscalculation might mean the upsetting of the entire succession. It cannot be said that the Prince himself is in favor of these restrictions of his liberty, but the Emperor agrees with his advisers and he is accustomed to being obeyed

As the German nation studies these pictures of the trip which their future Emperor and Empress took around the world they congratulate themselves over and over again that no fatal accident occurred. The German people would be unwilling to see the young pair start on another trip like it

Some Americans have doubted the wisdom of the long trips even around their own country which Presidents have been taking since Roosevelt set the example. Only lately the Presidential train was saved from a terrible accident only by the driving away of miscreants about to blow up a bridge over which that train was to pass

It is not a pleasant thing to submit to all these restrictions, but important personages dare not risk as much as ordinary individuals.

THERE is, of course, no fundamental cerebral difference between a coal heaver on Avenue A and a multi-millionaire society idler on Fifth avenue. Anybody with the money and the little list of tricks is eligible for a place in high society." Gelett Burgess, the humorist, has satirized modern frivolous society in his book and his play, "The Cave Man," now running at the Hudson Theatre, New York, which records the successful progress of a coal heaver who entered society.

Haulick Smagg is the coal heaver, and Mr. Smagg (from the pen of Gelett Burgess, his creator), explains here on this page to-day his view of modern inane society.

It was a society woman, "Florrie," who introduced Mr Smagg to the New York salons as a huge practical joke.

By Haulick Smagg.

FLORRIE says to me: "You've got to go either saddled and bridled, or booted and spurred!"

Florrie says: "Be familiar with the old ladies. Make love to 'em and call 'em by their first names. Women hate to be thought old!"

Florrie says to me: "You've got to think at first. The queer thing about thinking is that once you've begun you can't stop it. But that's all right, you'll want to get out of society if you only keep your ideal as an intelligent coal heaver. And if you stop thinking you won't be able to."

Florrie says there was a lot of what she called "bromides," I had to learn. That was easy. If any one speaks about any one you happen to know, all you have to say is: "The world is a small place after all." If they laugh at anything what's happened to you, you tag on: "Why, if I wrote down the story of my life, the way it really happened, it would make the biggest novel in the world!" They's a lot more. No end of theatre talk, like: "I never like a sad play; I think they's sadness enough in the world"—and "what great star have we now that Mansfield's dead!" That's how it is all along the line. One or two of them "bromides" goes a long way in a 5 o'clock tea, or such as that.

I thought Florrie had learned me 'em all, till I met up with a distinguished leader of fashionable society. Then I went home and made a new list.

"It's love what makes the world go round," he says to me, "and if young folks realized the sanctity of marriage they'd be fewer divorces." I recall Magullion talking that way, when he'd had two drinks, often.

"Life's a battle," says he, "and the romance soon goes; you're lucky if the money don't, too!"

Then he sprung, "It takes all sorts of people to make a world, Mr. Smagg, and the poor have their virtues, just the same as the rich does!"

I seen him later at the Horse Show with Mrs. Ogden Mills, and he was saying to her, "the dreadful responsibility of wealth is that it makes one so respectable, Mrs. M., and if I'd only of went in for being a minister, as I hoped, I couldn't of been more so, Mrs. M."

But it beats me why they don't take their money and have a good time.

Florrie says wealth is a disease, and the first sign of it is that your imagination's paralyzed. It sure looks that way. Here's Cornelius Vanderbilt working in machine shops half the time, dirty as I ever was, and Alfred is nothing more'n a coachman, that I can find out. Joined the hackman's union in San Francisco, even! It gets me! Annie Morgan, Pierpont's daughter, is herding immigrants into Castle Island, when she ain't in a Turkish bath up to the Colony Club, or starving herself to death to get thin.

"Yes, it's a funny thing about this here "400." They're all working pretty near as hard as folks do on the East Side, only they don't get paid for it, in fun or in money. They're all of 'em got a trade, it seems.

Then there's Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont's cow farm, down on Long Island. Why, if a woman on Delancey street wore pants at work she'd be the talk of the East Side. That's carrying Female Suffrage a bit far, I figure. I don't say Mrs. Belmont wears pants down at Hempstead, but I seen pretty girls that did, and she knows it. They ought to go to California and vote for Taft.

And that reminds me of another lady I met in society who gets her name a lot in the papers. I come across her one day on Fifth avenue, the time the Suffragettes marched by, and she had tears in her eyes.

"Mr. Smagg," she says, "I been to the races often enough, and I thought I knew how to pick a winner. When I got in on the Anti-Suffrage side I was sure it would come in ahead, and I stood to win all kinds of social pull by backing it. Then that there Mrs. Belmont come out for the Votes-for-Women filly, bought an expensive jockey and had him rode home a furlong ahead of the field. Can you beat it. Now I'm on the wrong side of the avenue, nobody pays me calling cards, any more, and I did—want—to—be—so—smart—sadly."

That's the way it goes. Some of 'em go in for Bahaism and some for Suder man, and some for Social Settlement, and some for Wooden Box Furniture. You never can tell how the 400's going to jump next season.

I'll tell you a woman I liked, though and that's Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney. She's a cheerful lady! Of course she's pretty near spoiled MacDougal alley, it don't smell like it used to, and the artist chaps get run over with automobiles right in front of their own shops, nowadays, but she's done good work crowding 'em into her set.

All fashionable artists are easy. You go in and look at a picture and you twiddle your thumb and say: "I like this part, in here!" Then you give "tricky foreground" and "effects of light" and a few things like that, "architectural composition" and "chiaro-scuro"—and then you're right on the inside with the artist crowd. It didn't take me ten minutes to learn how to do it.

Then, when you get stuck and are in all over Europe trying to get a string of black pearls for mourning? Don't you ever mention mourning or divorce in New York.

Then they was that time Reggie Vanderbilt opened his shoe closet, and I seen eighty-four pairs of shoes. "What," I said, "I never knew you had that many over your head, Florrie showed me how you could always get out of it by saying something nice to 'em. Why, one time when one sprung something about hygienics or eugenics, or some high-brow stuff like that, on me, I says to her: "Say, they's more expression in your hands than in most people's faces, I can't take my eyes off'n 'em!" Why, she blushed up like a young girl, and asked me would I join the National Civic Federation.

At any, d'you know Mrs. Borden Harriman and me's in the same class? Sure! Didn't she run round seeing boiler rooms all that Winter when she was on the Stationary Fireman Committee, and not only that, but didn't she shovel coal with the boys? No wonder her and me got on great! Us folks what ain't afraid to dirty our hands is the real thing!

Of course I had to play a lot of bridge Florrie give me the rule to always lose with women and win with men, and so I got along fine.

Lord, it's all easy enough when you know how!

I remember up at one society leader's house I told her a funny story Magullion used to get off about a woman who was so broke up when her husband died she changed all her servants from white to black! Lord, Florrie give it to me when we got out on the street!

"Haulick," she says, "for heaven's sake, ain't you heard how that lady went brothers!" I says: "all your size, too!" He told me Al had a hundred dummies, like a tailor's, all dressed up in the top floor of his house, to keep his clothes on so they wouldn't get wrinkled. Every one of 'em was a dead likeness, too. They say it beats the Eden Musee. When his wife got lonesome for him they say she used to go up there and get so sick of him she could stand it for a while longer.

The main difference is that down on Delancey street the men run things, but up on Fifth avenue it's the women! When a man comes home at night he don't know whether his wife's going to have a reception, an English Lord, or a divorce ready for him when he opens the door. They pull down the window shades and light the candles for a bridge party, just like we go on Delancey street for a wake.

And then again, they're all of 'em making off they're something different from what they really are. Young girls pretend they're wicked, and married women try to make you think they're not. It's a queer game till you're onto it. Why, down on Delancey street, when I see a man with a shovel and an undershirt, I know he's a coal heaver, or like that, don't I? If he's got a white jumper and overalls, he's a plasterer, and that's all about it. If he's got a lot of buttons or I know he's a cop. But up on Fifth avenue, when I find three men with white shirts and dress suits on, darned if I know which is the waiter, the cook or the gentleman!

Down on the East Side they put men in jail for stealing. North of Forty-second street they put 'em in the Social Register.

Opera? Oh, yes, I done it till I was dopey! I recall once I was invited. I'd been up all night playing bridge at the Knickerbocker Club, and I was so sleepy I couldn't keep awake. So on my way I dropped into a drug store and asked the clerk for something to keep me from falling asleep. He must have heard me wrong. Anyway I took a dose of it and it turned out to be morphine. Opera's dead enough at any time, but that night was something horrid! Luckily I snored a lot between acts. The lady who I took us looked at me and said: "What a sympathetic lover of Wagner you are, to be sure, Mr. Smagg. You have the motifs down perfectly!"

In the "400" that's what they all do—pay about ten times what the fun's worth. When a workingman takes his family down to Coney and spend a dollar he gets about nine cents' worth of fun; but what with the dressing and the waiting and the being bored and knocked, and the tips and flowers and stuff, they ain't a millionaire in New York who can get twenty cents' worth of good out of a dollar. They get caught in the wheels and they can't stop that mortal round of parties and things, for their wives are turning the crank.

It's hard enough to get in, but it's a great sight harder to get out—unless you go out the back door in a hurry. It's like going to a circus. At first it's fine, and you watch all three rings: Eleanor Sears doing stunts in a sweater in the middle, Mrs. Frederick Neilson telling funny stories on one side, and Harry Lehr doing the clown on the other. But Lord, it gets mighty tiresome, and the pink lemonade and popcorn they give you on upper Fifth avenue don't feed like the red meat you get at Macullion's free lunch counter—not by a long ways!

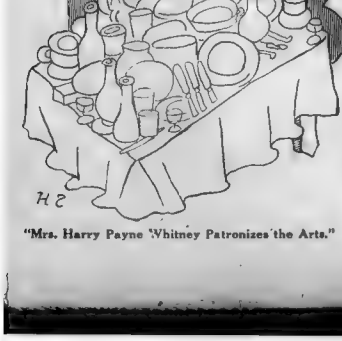
That's why Florrie and me got out of it. Say, did you ever go to each one of 'em's mirror mazes down to Coney? Well it's good to get out into the fresh air again, where things was real, and not all shot. That's the way I felt. Florrie and me beat it right down to Newport to the Jack Geraghtys and talked it over.

"They's nothing in traveling over the speed limit," says Jack to me, "and it didn't take Julia long to find that out. I'm glad you got as much sense. The matter with them folks is they got waste in their gasolene. Now you've punctured your game and had a blow-out, you'll find it a heap more fun living."

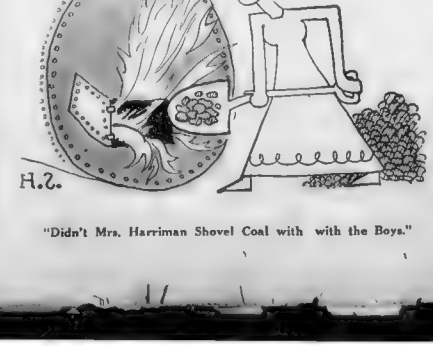
We ostracized Society and now the ain't but 398 of 'em left in New York!

"There's a Fashionable Leader That Says a Lot of True Things."

"Mrs. Belmont Came Out for the 'Votes-for-Women' Filly and Had Him Rode Home a Furlong Ahead of the Field."



"Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney Patronizes the Arts."



"Didn't Mrs. Harriman Shovel Coal with with the Boys."

"Teach me, Haulick Smagg, or Any Coal Heaver, the Tricks and Give Him a Million and He Don't Even Have to Change His Clothes to Have 5th Avenue Recognize Him."

TREASURE!

To Search a Pirate's Island for the Hoards Hidden in Its Coral Sands and for a Rich, Underground, Mysterious Temple of an Ancient and Vanished Race.

The Village of San Miguel, Cozumel, Once a Great Stone City, Razed by the Spaniards; Later a Pirate's Headquarters.

AN expedition with a double-headed object will shortly sail for Cosumel, a little island off the eastern coast of Yucatan. The island once held the Holy City of the Mayas, the rich and cultivated race which gave way in Mexico to the Aztecs.

Here the Mayas had a sacred underground temple that was the holy of holies of their island shrine. This temple has never been entered by a white man. Its secret was preserved during the Spanish occupation of the island, and it is reasonable to suppose that it still holds whatever store of ancient treasure in the way of offerings to the gods that it held when the cruel rites of the Mayas ceased.

But after the Spanish occupancy Cosumel became the retreat of the buccaneers and of the wickedest pirates of the old freebooter times. Treasure lies hidden in many places on Cozumel; some of it has been recovered.

Recently the place was visited by an expedition under the auspices of the Peabody Museum of Harvard University. What they discovered in this bit of land, set like a green jewel in the blue of the Caribbean, with over it hanging the glamour of romance, the presence of hidden treasure and the secret sanctuary of a vanished race, led them to make plans for a prompt return and a complete exploration of the place.

The first mention in history of Cozumel is made in the memoirs of Bernal Diaz, who accompanied the first two expeditions into this part of New Spain. He writes that when the first expedition under the leadership of the Spanish soldier of fortune, Grijalva, touched the shores of Cozumel in 1519, the island was the Mecca of the Mayas, and that they made yearly pilgrimages hither to offer sacrifices on the altars of the many temples which then dotted the surface of the land.

Of these dozens of sanctuaries there remain but a few dilapidated monuments to mark the presence of this wonderful culture. It was in this same year that the flat of destruction went out against the race, when the Spaniards first set foot on the coral shores, marched through the town—which was on the present site of San Miguel—and up the steps of a pyramid, on top of which was a beautifully carved and painted temple.

The strangers watched with interest an old man offering sacrifices on the altar, and then expostulated with the Mayas for worshipping "false gods." The Mayas retorted that these were the gods of their fathers, that they were kind gods, and that if the strangers molested them the gods would show their wrath by sinking the vessels of the strangers in the sea. To show that they were in earnest in their desires for the Mayas to repudiate the ancient deities, the Spaniards rolled the idols down the steps of the pyramid, forced the Indian mason to construct a Christian altar, upon which mass was immediately said.

At first Cosumel, or as it is called in the Mayan tongue, Cusamil, was considered one of the most important seas of Spain; but when the richness of the mainland of Mexico was appreciated, the fortune hunters deserted the church which had been erected on the island and flocked to the mainland, where vast mineral resources drew thousands of adventurers.

With the going of the Spaniards Cosumel once more was left to follow the ancient worship, and for a period of years the Mayas were left undisturbed.

But not for long, for once more there descended upon the island a horde of destroyers, even more avaricious and merciless than the early Spaniards. The pirate crews put in at Cosumel to bury and divide their loot, and many are the scenes of debauchery and license under the whispering palms could tell! The fights of gambling buccaneers, the trembling women captives who stood huddled together while the "free companions" shook dice for them! The little harbor of San Miguel became the caressing place for their vessels, and ship owners knew the place for a robbers' roost from which they preyed upon the shipping of the Spanish Main.

Morgan, Lafitte, and later Molas, employed the island as a place to hide from the ships-of-line sent out against them. Lafitte especially using Cosumel as a safe deposit for the plunder of hundreds of ships.

This wily old originator of organized piracy knew that only an island void of any human life would be a safe place in which to place his treasure, and so to further this end he forced all the Maya Indians who still remained on the island to board his ships and be carried to the mainland, where they mixed with the natives and soon lost their identity as islanders.

Those who hesitated in following the mandates of the head of the pirate trust were promptly put to the sword. In order that they might have no incentive to return, Lafitte ordered all the temples to be razed, the idols to be overthrown, and with the island deserted save for the presence of reptiles and the wild things of the jungle, he dumped many thousands of dollars in coin and bullion on the strands of Cosumel, where, excepting the little which has been found by chance, it still lies hidden under the coral sands.

One instance which goes far to corroborate the many instances of buried treasure, strange maps and all the rest of the stage setting which goes with hunts for hidden treasure occurred at Cozumel. A few years ago there appeared off the shores of the island a ship flying the English flag. A small boat put off, and its occupants on landing on the beach set out immediately for the thick jungle which now covers nearly all of the island. Among them was a woman, who soon reappeared, followed by the men of the party, carrying a heavy box. They embarked at once and sailed away to the north. Who they were, or whence they came no one has ever been able to find out. Not even the name of the ship could be detected by the natives watching on the shore. When the strangers had departed the people of Cozumel, moved by curiosity, hunted through the thick bush in the immediate neighborhood of the spot where the visitors had landed, and found a square hole, which still bore the imprint of the iron-bound chest which they had seen carried off to the waiting ship.

Another instance is that of an old woman, who, according to the natives, was in communication with the devil. Undoubtedly the old lady encouraged the simple native folk in this belief, for she had a plan for finding some treasure, and wished to be free from the prying eyes of the inhabitants. Suddenly she announced that she was leaving Cosumel, and disclosed to her questioners as she was putting off for the sloop which was to take her to Mexico that she had found some of the loot which the ancient buccaneers had buried. In substantiation of her statement she showed them a leather trunk in which reposed a pile of money of old Spanish coinage.

But aside from the hold which Cozumel has upon the expedition because of the buried treasure, there is the immense archaeological interest second to none in importance and romance. It is known that the island was the Mecca of the Mayas in ancient times; that there were many codices written in the strange Mayan pictographs in numbers which were equalled in few other places; that no mention, either in legend or history, has been made of the fate of the ancient manuscripts. On the mainland all the Maya codices found by the Spaniards were destroyed. Centuries after the Spanish conquest there turned up in Europe the—so far as known—only extant Maya codices in the world, four in number, of which the so-called Dresden Codex is the only one known to be complete.

It is also a matter of record that there exists on Cosumel an underground temple, buried somewhere in the depths of the jungle, the entrance to which has been seen by various persons, of whom only one now is living, and who was found by the Peabody expedition. This old fellow, as it happens, has penetrated further into the underground sanctuary than any other human of modern times. He tells that while hunting in the forest one day he stumbled upon the opening, and clearing away the brush which grew over the mouth, found some worn stone steps leading down into the earth. Lighting a candle, he penetrated the mouth and continued further into the cave. In a short time he found himself outside the oxygen zone; his candle went out. After making repeated and vain attempts to relight it, he became convinced that the temple was still inhabited by the gods of the ancient peoples who lived and died so many centuries ago, and being incensed at the invasion by an unbeliever, they had blown out his candle as fast as he relit it. He made for the outer air and has returned to the temple no more.

He has said that by the dying light of his candle he saw stretching away into the darkness rows and rows of stone pillars. What is at the further end of this mysterious temple no one in modern times has been able to find out. In fact, the presence of this subterranean temple is not known to a dozen people besides the inhabitants of Cosumel.

There is good reason to believe that the temple was the storehouse in which the ancient Mayan priests placed records of religious and historical value, and which have remained undisturbed probably to this day, unless the pirates, happening on it by chance, used it as a place in which to hide loot they did not wish to bury.

The Dresden Codex alone is worth many thousands of dollars. What would be the value of an ancient Mayan library is beyond calculation. Furthermore, the Spaniards may have taught some of the Mayas the use of Arabic letters, which are so much easier to use than the complicated pictographs of the aborigines, and there is the possibility of finding in this cave a Mayan Rosetta Stone, the key to the hieroglyphics of the earliest American man with a written language.

Until the present time these glyphs are undecipherable, and the finding of some means by which to translate the old Mayan pictographs would be of untold value to the scientific world. It would open up a field of research unequalled in archaeology with the exception of Egypt. It would give the history of the origin of this strange race which perhaps came over from China thousands of years ago, and seeded on the American continent.

The expedition will try to find it.

TRAGEDY!

The Belle Who Had "The Best of Broadway Luck" Now Dying Deserted in Poverty!

Florence Schenck in Her Broadway Days. And (Below) Her Latest Picture Taken in Paris.

A BEAUTIFUL young girl tired of the quiet routine of home in a small Southern city and ran away to New York. That girl to-day is reported to be dying and destitute in Paris. Her story is the tragedy of three cities.

"Poor Florence Schenck," say those who knew her, shaking regretful, pitying heads, heads crowned by the typical large, soft felt hat in Norfolk, by the high hat of the diner out in New York and the pompadoured, powdered head of the frequenters of the halls of the gayest set in Paris.

Yet it was only four years ago that every one who knew Florence Schenck was saying "Lucky Florence Schenck." For she had all that is comprised in what Broadway calls "luck."

She had beauty of an unusual order. Blonde and tall and graceful, with large blue eyes and a slow, sweet smile that matched her soft, slow speech, she was lovely as the famous blondes created by brush of great painters. She had what, prized everywhere, is especially esteemed in the South, "family."

Dr. Powhatan Schenck, her father, was representative of one of the old families of Virginia and a skilled surgeon in the naval service.

But Norfolk, the seaport gate of Virginia, began to seem dull to the girl of seventeen. She read and thought much about the metropolis. She wanted to drive on Fifth avenue, go to the playhouses on Broadway and shop on Thirty-fourth street. When the serpent entered the Eden of this Southern home the other serpent of discontent had prepared his way.

Norfolk had a horse show. To this horse show came Alfred Vanderbilt, and with him a stout, middle-aged, grizzled trainer, Charles H. Wilson. When the Vanderbilt string of horses left for New York the trainer persuaded the most beautiful girl in Norfolk to accompany him. She forgot her fiance, a young lieutenant in the navy. Her middle-aged wooer dazzled her, less perhaps with his own mature masculine charms than with his tales of the brilliant life she would enjoy in New York.

Florence Schenck disappeared from the low, square, white house, the Schenck home, in Norfolk. Acquaintances greeted her in Washington, but she evaded them in the crowd. Glimpses of her in New York, and later in London, showed her always at the side of Vanderbilt's trainer, the man Wilson.

Occasionally she drove one of the Vanderbilt pairs, Wilson supervising, and on both continents was read news of the beautiful young Vanderbilt whip, the girl who had run away from Virginia to become a trainer.

Those in the circle of the Vanderbilt paddocks smiled when they read this, but said nothing. It was the girl herself who disclosed the tarnished romance when, returning from London with Wilson, she quarreled with him at the pier and told the story of his luring her from home upon promise of marriage next day at Washington, of postponing the marriage until their arrival in New York, and of then confessing to her that he could not marry her because he was already married, and of inducing her to accompany him to London on condition that he would, while they were in Europe, secure a divorce and make her his wife. They had returned to New York without the divorce, and she bitterly denounced him on the dock.

Upon the evidence of that stormy scene on the dock, Mrs. Wilson herself secured a divorce. The Virginia girl and the Vanderbilt trainer again went abroad. There was a rumor that they had married while there. Proof of the untruth of this came in Wilson's recent marriage to another woman, Miss Josephine Delahanty, of Boston.

Florence Schenck, the second time abandoned by Wilson, attempted to kill herself by taking chloral. The attempt failing, the girl said:

"And I am only twenty-one. Since I ran away from home four years ago I have lived sixty years of humiliation and heartbreak. When I discovered my mistake I would have gone back home if they would have let me. I would have crawled back on my hands and knees, my head in the dust, but my father forbade me to ever cross the threshold of our home or ever communicate with my sisters. Oh, if I could only communicate with them. I could warn those lovely girls of what a monster the world is; how it waits, coiled in the heart of what we call the 'gay life,' to strangle their souls. I would warn them against the weakness and folly that have been my downfall."

Miss Schenck drifted to Paris. Destitute and probably dying, she lies at the American Hospital at Neuilly. Through the courts an attempt was recently made to compel the man who she still asserts was once her husband to provide means to keep her out of a charity institution, but it failed. The stamp of the drunkard is upon the features of her who four years ago was "the most beautiful girl in Norfolk."

MYSTERY! Who Is the Wicked Siren Who Sells Death and Ruin to the Rich and Noble of Europe?

LOVE!

Paris, Oct. 25

THE secret police of Paris and other capitals are sorely puzzled as to the identity of a mysterious woman criminal who has brought ruin and death to young men and women of wealth and family all over Europe.

So skilful and secret has she been in her operations that they have only caught glimpses now and then of her personality sufficient to assure them that she is a woman. They call her "Madame Y" for want of a better name. She is as dangerous as Professor Moriarty of the Sherlock Holmes stories and far more subtle in her methods.

Frequently she acts in the guise of a matrimonial agent, offering to provide wealthy brides for impecunious noblemen. She was the original cause of the terrible scandal in which young Count Gisbert Wolff Metternich has become involved.

The Count has been arrested in Berlin charged with obtaining vast sums of money from business men by fraud, forgery and false pretenses.

In his defense he alleged that he had been led into extravagances by a matrimonial agent, who promised to secure for him a great heiress as a bride, namely, Miss Anita Stewart, daughter of Mrs. James Henry Smith, of New York. This match was prevented by the appearance of a suitor with a more imposing title, Prince Miguel of Braganza.

"The Prince," said Count Metternich's counsel, "was the greatest swindler and the most notorious cheat in the world. Surely my client was a more suitable candidate for Miss Stewart's hand, since he had no criminal record behind him."

Count Metternich is of splendid family, being a relative of the Austrian Emperor and a nephew of the German Ambassador to London. His father, however, allowed him only $75 a month, and he indulged in extraordinary practices to live on this income. He admitted that he borrowed $300 from a woman he met in the Palais de la Danse, and explained that many young noblemen obtained funds in that way.

For a time he eked out his income by making himself useful in the house of Mrs. Wolff Wertheim, the wife of the richest tradesman in Berlin. Count Metternich alleged that he was regarded as the fiance of Miss Dolly, the only daughter of the family, whereas Mrs. Wertheim declared that he was a sort of head lackey. The very piquante evidence showed that he sat up with the girl after her parents had gone to bed, while she let him play with her hair and lie at her feet for hours as she sprawled on a sofa.

The Count never saw the woman who proposed to find a millionaire bride for him, but she was represented by a splendid looking old officer, known as General Paull, with white hair and a broad breast covered with medals of honor. After the proposed marriage with Miss Stewart had failed, the mysterious woman agent secured for Count Metternich an actress bride—Claire Vallentin of Vienna—asserting that her earnings were equivalent to a capital of $2,000,000.

The actress's wealth was used up in an effort to settle the enormous debts the Count had piled up by his alleged fraudulent practices. His counsel said that at least twenty young noblemen had been ruined through the same mysterious agency, and of these six had committed suicide.

The same agency is traced in the case of Mlle. Renee Thirion, a young French woman, who has just been sentenced to six months' imprisonment at Liepsic for spying on German military secrets.

She is a girl of a wealthy French family, and went as a governess to Germany in order to study the language thoroughly. While there she naturally met a number of German officers, and this furnished the basis of a charge that she had used her beauty and influence over them to extract military secrets from them. It was charged, in fact, that she had obtained Germany's secret mobilization plans in case of war.

The principal witness against her was an officer named Captain von Schesmer. The trial was secret, but it has been learned that an unknown matrimonial agent had promised to place the young woman in his power. She was decoyed into an unoccupied house on the pretense of a social invitation, but the plot failed because another officer who was in love with her followed her and made his appearance in the nick of time. After that she was arrested, a mass of evidence was presented against her, and she was sent to prison.

A ramification of the same far-reaching criminal conspiracy was detected in London at the same time. Mrs. Forbes Leslie, calling herself "the Duchess of Villano," was convicted at the Old Bailey of passing worthless checks. She was declared to be a member of a band of marriage brokers operating all over Europe, who lured American and other rich girls into marrying impecunious and often criminal noblemen.

The Duchess, who is a white-haired, handsome woman, was married as a girl to an English officer. Later she married Dr. Forbes Leslie, who called himself Duke of Villano, with what authority is uncertain. She lived with him until 1906, when she was convicted in Paris of fraud.

After coming out of prison she became a tool of the female arch criminal, whose operations have been traced all over Europe.

ROMANCE!

The Chase of an English Marquis for the Richest Rajah's Daughter.

"Rings on her fingers,
Bells on her toes,
Elephants to ride on Wherever she goes."

London, Oct. 26

THE most interesting romance of British aristocratic society just now is the ardent courtship of the pretty dusky Princess Patrivа of Cooch-Behar by the young Marquis of Stafford.

The Marquis is the oldest son and heir of the Duke of Sutherland, who is the greatest landholder in the United Kingdom, owning 1,358,600 acres and many great houses. The young Marquis's mother, the Duchess of Sutherland, is noted for her beauty, her public spiritedness, her sporting qualities and her democratic manners.

The Princess Patrivа, generally known to her friends as the "Princess Pretty," is the daughter of the recently deceased Maharajah of Cooch-Behar, an important Indian potentate.

She is exquisitely pretty and only slightly dusky, though her features have a strong Oriental cast, her skin is almost as fair as that of a dark-haired English girl. She has been highly educated in Europe. Her mother, the Maharanee, is one of the most enlightened of Hindu women. Unlike the typical East Indian woman, Princess Patrivа is very fond of outdoor sports and very clever at them, too.

The Cooch-Behars stayed all Summer at Bexhill, an English Summer resort, where the young Marquis of Stafford was a constant visitor. He is a blond young giant, and formed a remarkable contrast with the pretty dark princess. They are now temporarily separated, the Princess and her mother have gone to India, visiting the late Maharajah's ashes with them.

The young Marquis's friends say that he is going to follow the Princess to India and pursue his courtship, making the great durbar about to be held in honor of King George's accession a pretext for going there.

The family of the Marquis are bitterly opposed to the marriage, principally on account of the difference in race. Only one matrimonial alliance between a great English family and a Hindu family has taken place in recent years. That was between Lady Anne Coventry, youngest daughter of the Earl of Coventry, and Prince Duleep Singh, son of the deposed Maharajah of the Punjaub.

This marriage has not been particularly happy and has been severely condemned by all Englishmen familiar with India. They say that the ideas of a Hindu man concerning women are such that it is terrible to think of a refined English girl being tied to one of them in marriage.

Would this objection apply to the union of an English man and a Hindu woman?

In case the young Marquis should become the husband of the Princess Patrivа and go to live in India, an interesting experience would await him. He would be entitled to an escort of twenty-one elephants caparisoned in scarlet and gold wherever he appeared in public. He would sit under a sacred umbrella surrounded by one hundred pundits learned in the ancient wisdom and magic of the Hindus. He would, in fact, enjoy many curious privileges.

The Perplexities of a Fascinating Widow (by Divorce) Who Can't Pick Her Variety Out of 14 Kinds.

"LOVERS? Alas, I have lovers in plenty. My difficulty is to choose the one from the many!" Such must be the sad plaint of the beautiful Mrs. Pedar Bruguiere, the most fascinating of widows (twice by divorce).

Mrs. Bruguiere came out from the West two years ago. She arrived in New York by way of Paris and Newport. She is a rarely beautiful woman. She is so great a beauty that Newport looked coldly upon her.

"Who is the new beauty?" asked New York when Mrs. Bruguiere made her first appearance.

"She is the most talked of woman in the smart set, all the eligible men are flocking to her standard. She has lovers by the score, but can not decide which one to marry." Thus spake the well-versed New Yorker.

The handsome Pedar, descendant of a Spanish don, grew restive after a few years and secured a Reno divorce. Mrs. Pedar was in Paris at the time, visiting her mother-in-law, Mrs. Emile Bruguiere. The divorce was a great shock. She said that she did not know that Pedar intended to get one. "I loved him so!" she sighed, then wiped her tears and married one Stewart Denning, a stock broker.

A few months of married life with Mr. Denning evidently sufficed, for she secured a divorce from him in 1906. With her freedom she eradicated widow took her first husband's name.

From the beginning Mrs. Bruguiere made it very plain that she cared for neither money nor social position. "I shall marry for love," she said, "for love is the very greatest thing in the world."

And up the gray stone steps of the Bruguiere villa tripped first one dandy and then another. Even Ned Knight, the Philadelphia millionaire, smiled and twirling his dashing mustachios, and the young bloods, Cyril Hatch, Grizzy Thompson and Monty Waterbury turned green with envy.

From the beginning, however, Williams P. Burden commonly known as "Winsome Will Winbie," had the inside track. Mrs. Burden's first wife, the beautiful Natica Rives, died under most tragic circumstances. He was morose and heartbroken for several years following the tragedy.

Mrs. Bruguiere's smiles first brought new happiness to the sad young widower. He devoted himself to her in Newport and in New York. Society looked on and said "They will marry next month."

Many months have passed. Mrs. Bruguiere, lovelier than ever, has been in Paris, in Berlin, in New York, and always she says: "I can not decide. I must marry where I love."

Just now the debonair Raoul d' Arnandi, the French duellist and intimate friend of Jimmy Hazen Hyde, is Mr. Burden's deadliest rival.

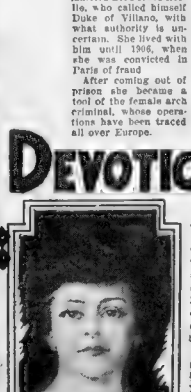
A few months ago one of the wealthiest widowers of Pittsburgh laid heart and many millions at Mrs. Bruguiere's slender feet. "I can not decide," she said. "Give me a few months in which to know my mind."

The widower is still waiting. In the meantime the portly and elegant Count von Bismuberg, German to his finger tips, has been added to the list of lovers. "Marry me and come to my castle on the Rhine," plead the Count on his knees. "I will adore you always, you are so beautiful!"

"Nein, nein!" replied the lovely siren. "I cannot tell, give me a month, two months, in which to know if I really love you."

It is a sad, a terrible thing to be too much loved by too many people. The harassing perplexities of the lovely Mrs. Bruguiere are all due to an overproduction of love. Can she, will she speedily decide to marry Mr. Burden, thus proving her great love for him?

DEVOTION! A Beautiful Woman Who Gives Up $2,000,000 to Wed the Man of Her Choice —and if THIS Isn't Devotion, What Is?



Mrs. David Dunlop, Who Gives Up Millions for a Man.

IT is not given to all women to prove their devotion to the one man in dollars and cents. 'Women are extravagant; all they think of is money," bear the critics carp! And yet one woman, Mrs. David Dunlop, of the Hot Springs colony, has given up two million dollars, and all for a man—Archibald McCrea, of Pittsburg.

This devoted bride was a Virginia belle, and one of the prettiest girls in all the State was Molly Johnston! And she had beaux by the score! Her first marriage was most romantic.

On her eighteenth birthday the very richest man in the community, David Dunlop, of Petersburg, rode through the town, saw the pretty Molly and fell in love with her. They were married six months later, youth and old age.

Four little girls were born to them, then Mr. Dunlop died. When his will was read there was intense surprise all around. To his son by his first marriage, David Dunlop, Jr., Mr. Dunlop left two millions, to the four little girls two millions, and to his beautiful wife two millions, provided that she did not marry again.

Mr. Dunlop died ten years ago. During these years the beautiful widow had, by actual count, fifty-two aspiring lovers, an average of one every ten weeks.

They did not know of the string attachment. But the widow did, and looked coldly on them all. They looked coldly back when they found out the truth.

At last he came, saw and conquered! This hero is the son of James McCrea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad. As president of the Union Springs Manufacturing Company, young Mr. McCrea has a large income, but—two millions is two millions!

When the handsome football player met the charming widow he discovered two things—that he was in love with her and cared not a rap for her money.

If this is not devotion, then what is meant by that word of eight letters?

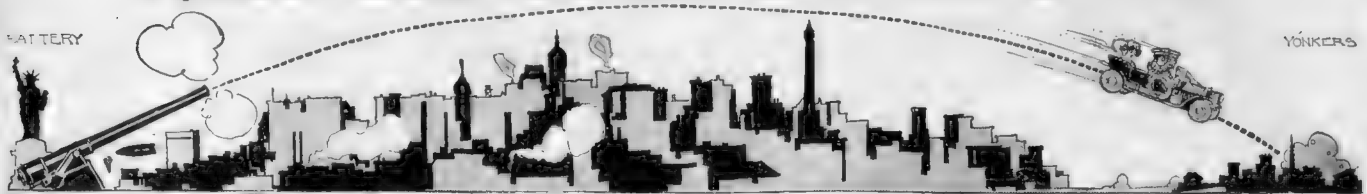
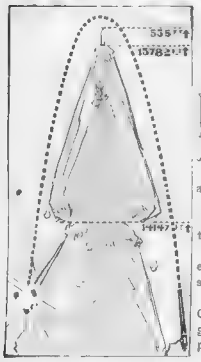
The Big 16-Inch Gun Can Fire a 2,400-Pound Projectile 23 Miles.—This Force Would Throw an Ordinary Four-Seated Automobile from the Battery in New York to Yonkers.



How Our Big Canal Will Be Protected.

The Unique Journey of the Biggest Gun in the World to Guard Our Mammoth Waterway.

The Gun Is Fifty-three Feet Long—On End the Height of an Ordinary Four-Story House.



It Can Fire a Shot Over Mont Blanc, Pike's Peak and the Washington Monument Piled on Top of One Another.

What the Big Gun's Trip Means.

IT WILL require a specially built railroad car to carry it to the dock.

A giant derrick at Sandy Hook will place it on a lighter, which will carry it to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where another derrick will place it on a steamship.

It will have to lie on one side of the deck of the steamship, and a corresponding weight placed on the opposite side.

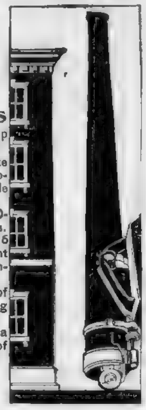
It will be a dangerous cargo in a hurricane.

5,000 men will be needed to handle it between Sandy Hook and Colon.

It will be upshipped at Atlantic end of the Panama Railroad and shipped by car to Pacific end.

It will cost $125,000 to mount the gun on a disappearing carriage.

The Gun Is Higher Than a Four-Story House.



WHAT THF BIG GUN DOES

IT will sink any ship afloat.

The shell will penetrate twenty inches of Kruppized steel and explode afterwards.

It will send a 2,400-shell twenty-three miles.

It will shoot 29,926 feet into the air, a height where human life is impossible.

It will be fired by 576 pounds of smokeless powder, with a bursting charge of 150 pounds of "dunnite."

The shell will travel half a mile a second, with a striking energy of 90,000 tons.

By Rene Bache.

THE greatest gun ever built is about to make the most remarkable journey ever undertaken by a monster piece of ordnance carried by freight.

The giant weapon in question is destined for the defense of the Panama Canal. It is of 16-inch calibre, weighs 180 tons, is over fifty feet long and throws a 2,400 pound [illegible]

[illegible] Sandy Hook [illegible] mounted on what is [illegible] proof carriage" that is to say [illegible] being fixed, allows the [illegible] for [illegible] with a regular war carriage.

The War Department has decided to send this gun to the Isthmus because the fortifications there will be more important, and more likely to be attacked than any others we have. It is not unlikely that a number of similar weapons, of equal size and power, will be put into the Canal forts later on.

The problem of handling the huge gun will be one of no little difficulty. To transport it over so great a distance, and mount it [illegible]. At Sandy Hook however [illegible] devised flat cars drawn by steam or motives. By such means the weapon will be [illegible] wharf where [illegible] transfer [illegible] towed to the Brooklyn Navy Yard, where there are big cranes which will [illegible] the deck of a [illegible]

[illegible] on the deck of the steamer the gun will be conveyed to the Atlantic terminus of the Panama Railroad at Colon, and there will be transferred by steam cranes to a flat car which will take it across the Isthmus of Panama. The War Department has decided to mount it on the fortifications on the Pacific side, because that is the end of the canal which, for geographical reasons, would be most open to attack.

Great expense will be entailed by its establishment in a suitable emplacement of concrete upon a carriage of the disappearing type. Probably the carriage alone will cost about $125,000. A gun mounted on such a contrivance elevates its muzzle over the parapet to fire a shot, and then sinks out of sight until ready to deliver the next blow

Although the fortifications for the Canal have already been fully planned, the details regarding them are kept secret. All that is known is that the two ends of the ditch will be defended by seven forts in all—three at the Atlantic end, and four at the Pacific opening. These works will constitute two systems of forts—the four at the Pacific end operating together, and likewise the three at the Atlantic end.

Recently the War Department has acquired, by purchase from the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, ownership of [illegible] islands [illegible] are being [illegible] serve as [illegible] breakwater to protect the [illegible]

[illegible] will be mounted on these islands, and the group of forts on the Pacific side will probably be the strongest in the world—a veritable American Gibraltar. The group at the Atlantic end of the Canal, however, will be almost equally formidable, defensively speaking. In each group will be mounted a number of the great 14-inch rifles, which are weapons only surpassed in terrific capacity for doing damage by the mighty 16-inch gun now at Sandy Hook

The fortifications will all be underground. A hostile fleet approaching from the ocean will see nothing but a slope of grassy greensward, whether on the islands or on the mainland. There will be nothing visible to shoot at, for the great guns will be hidden in concrete lined pits, from which they are uplifted momentarily by their disappearing carriages to deliver their fire.

Quite a distance in the rear of each of the two groups of forts will be three large pits, each containing four 12-inch mortars — weapons, which, pointed toward the sky, throw huge conical shells, filled with high explosives, with such deadly accuracy as to drop them upon the deck of a battleship six miles away with a fair degree of certainty.

The locks of the Canal necessarily are vital points, and these will be defended by "field fortifications"—that is to say, well constructed earthworks, with 6-inch howitzers, 3-inch field guns, etc. These works are intended, of course for defense against possible attack by a land [illegible]. The War Department is going [illegible] considerable body [illegible] the Isthmus, comprising [illegible] cavalry, and artillery [illegible] was sent to the Canal [illegible] the Tenth Regiment, of Infantry which arrived there six weeks ago.

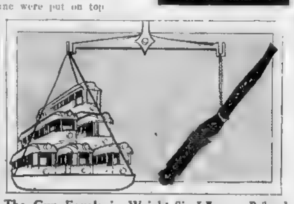
It may be taken for granted that the forts at the two ends of the Canal will be able to defeat any attack from the sea. No enemy would be likely, indeed, to attempt such a thing. But the safety of the ditch in future will absolutely depend upon the ability of our navy to control the sea approaches of the Canal. If a foe should once wrest from us such control, it could land as many troops as it liked on the Isthmus and take possession of the Canal.

The forts would be helpless.

The 16-inch gun, now about to be sent from Sandy Hook to Panama, is powerful enough to smash a battleship with a single well-delivered blow. No vessel could come within sight of the shore without being in imminent danger of destruction. Its range is enormously greater than that of any other gun ever built. Set up at the Battery, on the lower end of Manhattan Island, it could throw shells over Yonkers and some distance beyond Hastings-on-the-Hudson. Perth Amboy could not escape its attack, and Paterson would be within reach, with several miles to spare.

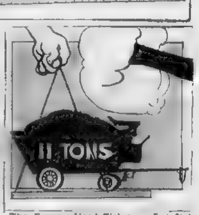
If Mount Blanc were put on top of Pike's Peak [illegible] height of [illegible] would be 2[illegible] feet. A [illegible] from this mighty weapon would pass over them with 530 feet to spare, reaching an elevation at which no human being could survive for more than a few minutes, for the lack of enough air to breathe. The shell contains a bursting charge of 150 pounds of the new high explosive, "dunnite," and on landing might totally wreck a whole block of buildings.

The projectile is fired with a charge of 576 pounds of smokeless powder. It is 5 feet 4 inches long and will penetrate three and a half feet of solid steel. On leaving the muzzle of the gun it travels at a rate of nearly half a mile a second, with a striking energy of 90,000 foot tons—enough to lift the Masonic Temple in Chicago three feet into the air!



The Gun Equals in Weight Six Heavy Railroad Cars of Thirty Tons Each.

The Projectile from the Gun Will Penetrate Fifty Feet of Wood Three Miles from Its Muzzle.



The Energy Used Firing Each Shot Would Raise 11 Tons One Foot.

Why a Nation's Brains and Ideals Are Made Up Only of the Food They Eat

By DR. H. W. LATHROP, of Wisconsin University.

T[illegible] The Gay [illegible] of which [illegible] he declares that Buddhism, for instance, may to a large extent be attributed to the excessive and almost exclusive rice fare of the Indian people. Such a fare, he contends, results in universal enervation and impels to the use of opium and narcotics. Potatoes, eaten excessively, excite a craving for brandy. In short, national habits and modes of thought and feeling may be directly traced to national food habits, and as a nation eats, so it thinks and acts.

With regard to meat, for instance, it is well known that it is not only a food, but also a stimulant, and physiologists agree that the use of one form of stimulant evokes a craving for others. The English partiality for roast beef is directly responsible for the national indulgence in alcoholic drinks. The more meat a nation eats, the more beer, whiskey and rum it will consume.

That the use of narcotics by the Chinese, Japanese and Indians and their fatalistic views of life may be directly traced to the fact that rice is the principal staple of their diet is conceded by medical investigators. It must not be understood, however, that there is anything undesirable in rice as a food; the lamentable consequences in the case of the Orientals being their excessive use of that article as a food and the consequent lack of meat and other protein-containing foods in their diet

Rice is a good food, containing 87 per cent of nutriment, but it is not all-sufficient. It contains but a very small proportion of protein, the stimulating factor in meat. Without the "stimulus for stimulants" which meat provides, a people subsisting upon a starchy diet incline to the opposite extreme and crave narcotics.

Herbert Spencer adopted vegetarianism by way of experiment, but after a year he was so struck by the deterioration of his literary output during that period that he gave it up.

It has been observed, too, that vegetarians who have, before adopting that regimen, been moderate drinkers and smokers very often lose, wholly or in part, the taste for alcoholic beverages or tobacco. If the adoption of a vegetarian diet so speedily overcomes the craving for stimulants, it is not difficult to understand how a prolonged national diet of rice or other protein-lacking foods may have the opposite effect, and make a people indolent, fatalistic and narcotic slaves.

The most general national error in diet seems to be a lack of balance. Food has two functions—to build and repair body tissue and to furnish energy. For the first essential, foods containing nitrogenous material, such, for instance, as lean meat, egg white and the gluten of wheat, must be eaten, while for the other essential the body requires foods containing fats and carbohydrates. The average man requires about five times as much energy-producing food as tissue-building food, and unless a national diet is based upon this proportion it is deficient, and the error is bound in time to show itself in the national character.

The average man, for instance, should eat sufficient lean meat, eggs and bread per day to furnish him with a quarter of a pound of protein or tissue-building material, and sufficient cereals, vegetables, butter and fat to supply his body with one and a quarter pounds of fat and carbohydrates, or energy-producing elements.

To take more than the required amount of protein into the system will not only do no good but in the majority of cases results in positive harm, and the same is true of the energy-producing constituents of food

The food of a nation is determined to a large extent by circumstances. A people whose natural food resources enable it to select a well-balanced diet develops physically and mentally under the most favorable auspices, whereas a nation whose food selection is limited is bound eventually to deteriorate

Thus the Indians of North America lived not alone by hunting and fishing, but cultivated a number of food plants on an extensive scale. Maize, beans, pumpkins and sunflowers were the most common crops, Indian corn being easily first. All kinds of animals, birds, fish and shell fish were eaten, and large supplies of such animal foods were dried and smoked for Winter use. Bear fat and animal fats generally were collected in quantity, as was oil from the sunflower seed, and on the whole the diet of this race was well-balanced and calculated to bring out the best qualities latent in the noble red man.

Other races, however, were less fortunate. In the Arctic regions, at the present time as in the past, the food is always exclusively animal, because that is the only sort that is available in quantity. In the tropics again, where vegetable food is abundant, and animal foods readily decay, plant products are and always have been of very great importance in the diet.

In India, where the natives subsist on a diet low in protein and rich in energy, the inhabitants are poorly developed physically and their general condition is less satisfactory than that of Anglo-Indians and other colonists who live under similar conditions but on a more generous diet. The same has been noticed in China and Japan, too

What is true of the development of national character as a result of food habits is true, though to a lesser extent, perhaps, in the case of individuals and scientific investigators have recently been looking into the relation between limited diet and retarded or arrested development in the case of individuals.

Dr. C. F. Langworthy, the Government expert in charge of nutrition investigations in the Department of Agriculture, recently made a special report on food customs and diet in American homes.

"The fact that the food supply materially influences the animal body," he said, "is of particular importance in respect to the diet of young children and clearly shows that there is good reason for the general belief that in childhood the diet should be generous as well as composed of suitable food materials

"Fortunately for the United States, the question of physical deterioration cannot be raised with reference to the people as a whole. The large capacity for useful labor and the high average reached as to the grade of work performed are conceded by careful students of this subject in this country and elsewhere. The comparatively high standard as regards family and community hygiene and sanitation, and other similar factors, undoubtedly have a bearing on these questions, but no one can doubt that diet exercises an influence which is certainly not less great than any other single factor, and the American diet as a whole is varied and liberal."

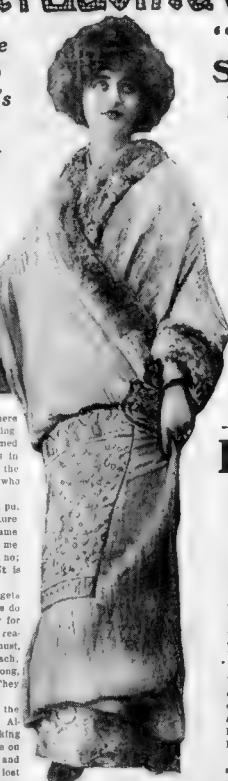
"Manuel Hasn't a Chance!"

"'Le Roi S'Amuse' Is an Ancient Custom—But Kings Dethroned Because of It Never Come Back"

"It has become the fashion to blame a King's love affairs for everything that goes wrong in his kingdom."



One of Gaby's Oddest Hats.

MUCH interest in the future of Ex-King Manuel of Portugal has been stirred up recently in America by the reports that an American girl, Anita Stewart, the New York heiress who married the Duke of Braganza, might ultimately sit upon Manuel's throne.

At the same time the Royalists were said to be getting ready to restore the youthful monarch who lost his throne mainly because his subjects did not approve of his friendliness toward Gaby Deslys, the French actress now appearing at the Winter garden in New York.

Many kings have been as frivolous as Manuel and have kept their jobs. Can it really be that a change of feeling is sweeping over the world and that rulers must look after their conduct as carefully as though they were plain people?

And if so, what chance had the American girl to climb up on the throne?

Gaby Deslys, it would seem, should know. She says she does know That the national ideals have changed and that neither Manuel nor the American heiress has a chance. Somewhat cynically she here tells why

By Gaby Deslys.

WILL King Manuel ever return to Portugal as king, and will Anita Stewart, the beautiful American wife of the Duke de Braganza ever see Portugal as queen? These two momentously interesting questions are asked me many times.

I answer them now for the first time! I say, No! No. Both are impossible. Manuel's career as king is finished. He can never, what you Americans say, "Come back."

The Duke de Braganza will never be king. The Duchess, with all her beauty and wealth, can never be queen. The Portuguese people are proud. They are contradictory. They want a republic. They are willing to be governed by a man or men of common birth But if they returned to the old order of things and again accepted a king, he must be of the highest, kingliest blood, and the queen must be of his own rank!

Scratch a Portuguese republican, and there under his skin is the aristocrat, the royalist! When Braganza married the American heiress he put himself on public record as not desiring the kingship of Portugal. In weighing the throne against the American heiress's millions the millions won!

No! It is said in Europe that the American girl wants to be queen, that her mother is willing to spend her fortune to place her on the Portuguese throne!

Such tales cannot be true. If the mother, Mrs. Smith, spent her fortune for that honor there would be no money left to live on! How foolish such tales are! If Portugal again accepts a king, mark my words, neither Braganza or Manuel will be it!

Manuel's kingly career ended forever at the tragic moment of his overthrow, just a year ago! When he left his country he knew that it was all over, that he could never "come back." It was a dark hour for the king. The only thing that consoled him was the thought of love! Kings are not always allowed to love! Poor kings!

On Wednesday, November 15, Manuel will be twenty-two years of age. I do not play that afternoon. Perhaps I shall not be in New York Wherever I am I shall celebrate it!

To me, as to the loyal Royalists of Portugal Manuel will always be king, my king! In my boudoir there are two photographs of my king One large one, on the mantel framed in silver. I keep fresh flowers in front of it all the time. No! not the flowers sent me by the men who come to watch me play!

On the table, just where I can put my hand on it, is a smaller picture I keep it in a heart-shaped frame These pictures mean much to me They bear the handwriting. No, no; I do not translate for you! It is meant just for ourselves!

In judging kings the world forgets that they are but human. Kings do not marry for love; they marry for the good of their country, for reasons of state. Their wives must, like Caesar's, be above reproach, they must be of royal blood, strong, able to bear many children. They do not always love the king!

Study the history of kings of the world, and what do you find? Always, or nearly always, the king with his domestic wife, finds love on the outside. Kings of France and of other Latin countries have lost their heads and thrones through losing their hearts

How curious it is that England, the home of the most respectable middle class people, a people who make virtue and morality their gods, will forgive in a king what more supposedly lax countries will not tolerate.

Read the histories of the English kings! Read their immoralities, their dissipations, and yet their thrones stood! The ultra-respectable bulk of the people, the great middle class, closed its eyes and said, "The king can do no wrong"

Why is this so? Why do English kings live down things which lead a Latin ruler to exile? It is, I am sure, because to the English a king has been as a tradition, a figure head. His indiscretions, his peccadilloes could not affect the actual government of the country.

In France, in Portugal, in Spain, the kings have been nearer the people, their behavior in public and private has had direct influence in the government, on the people. And so they have lost their thrones, and sometimes their heads.

Alfonso, the King of Spain, has recently fallen in love with a Spanish dancer. This story has been published in America and in England, and is believed I do not believe it. Alfonso is too much in love with his wife, with Queen Victoria, and too fond of his children to bother with a dancer

And This Is a Rare Picture of Gaby Without Any Hat at All—Just as Little Manuel Hasn't Any Crown at All.

It has become the fashion to blame a king's love affairs for everything that goes wrong in his kingdom

When a people are dissatisfied they say, "First let us find some woman to blame it on, and then let us rise up and fight the king."

It is the same with countries as with Adam. He was the first today, "Cherchez la femme! Pouf!"

A year ago, Manuel, my king, lost his throne. The whole world, even the United States, which is hypocritically virtuous, shrugged should ers and said, "Cherchez la femme!" It was said and believed that my pink toes, my pearls had destroyed "Cherchez la femme! Pouf!"

That uprising had been planned a long time! The people wanted a republic when the former king and his heir were assassinated! When the time was ripe they deposed the poor king and exiled him.

I like the Americans I have met But, oh, you are hypocritical! You would not have a President who was divorced: you do not put in high places men whose lives have held domestic scandals—that is, if such scandals are public! This is hypocrisy!

Among your smart set you have women who lead your Newport set who have had one, two divorces! They marry, then they get rid of that man just to marry another, and so on

How do they differ from the friends the kings of history have had? The women of history have been open and honest. They stood frankly before the world and say, "I have taken the king as my friend;" the woman of the smart set hides behind her cloak of hypocrisy. She goes to that place called Reno. The judge says you are free, and she marries the next man And she continues to be received in her society!

In their hearts these women blame the woman of history, the friends of the kings, but they blame not themselves! Hypocrites!

In America these women come back! Kings deposed, where feminine influence has been blamed, never come back! Manuel, my king, will never come back!

How Wasp Stings Cure Influenza

FOR several months past England has been afflicted with a plague of hornets Perhaps, however, "afflicted" is not the proper word to use, for while, under ordinary circumstances, a hornet's sting is not the most pleasant of experiences, there are indications that it may prove very beneficial in cases of certain diseases, particularly influenza. Since the arrival of the hornets there have been fewer cases of influenza in England than ever before during a similar period

The inference naturally is that hornets' stings are effectual remedies for this ailment, and this conclusion is more or less borne out by a remarkable case just reported to Dr. Robert T Morris, the well known New York physician.

One of the doctor's patients has a country farm much infested by wasps. He was frequently stung by the insects without much disturbance beyond the use of expletives and local pain lasting for a few minutes.

Recently he suffered from an acute attack of influenza with profuse watery discharge from the nose, loss of appetite, general malaise and the usual symptoms of the disease. On the third day of this attack he was stung on the leg by a yellow jacket, technically known as vespa arenaria.

The site of the sting became excessively painful and swollen, with extensive serious infiltration in the tissues from the knee to the ankle An hour later the symptoms of influenza subsided rapidly, and three hours later the patient felt perfectly well, with a hearty appetite for dinner. This relief from the influenza lasted for two days, during the time when reaction from the sting of the wasp was most intense. On the subsidence of the inflammation of the leg on the third day symptoms of influenza reappeared, and while not as marked as previously for a fortnight.

"We know that bee stings have been used for the cure of rheumatism," declared Dr. Morris, "and in some parts of the country bee keepers receive a fee from rheumatic patients for systematic application of bee stings. This rather crude method of treatment has never received much recognition on the part of the profession, and I have been skeptical of the actual importance of such treatment, but the observation of the effect of a wasp sting in this case would suggest that the severe local reaction and the general effect from so slight an amount of poison as that introduced by a single yellow jacket brings up a subject worthy of really serious consideration"

That efficiency of bee stings in cases of rheumatism has been demonstrated in several hospitals here and in England, where a special technique for securing the stings has been perfected

At Roosevelt Hospital, New York, where the method was tried some time ago, a number of chronic patients were successfully treated, while similar results were obtained in several London hospitals, where the same treatment was applied.

William P. Fitzgerald, a wealthy brewer of Ansonia, Conn., recently had a severe attack of influenza with profuse watery discharge from the nose, loss of appetite, general malaise and the usual symptoms of the disease. The site of the sting became excessively painful and swollen, with extensive serious infiltration in the tissues from the knee to the ankle An hour later the symptoms of influenza subsided rapidly, and three hours later the patient felt perfectly well, with a hearty appetite for dinner. This relief from the influenza lasted for two days, during the time when reaction from the sting of the wasp was most intense. On the subsidence of the inflammation of the leg on the third day symptoms of influenza reappeared, and while not as marked as previously for a fortnight.

"We know that bee stings have been used for the cure of rheumatism," declared Dr. Morris, "and in some parts of the country bee keepers receive a fee from rheumatic patients for systematic application of bee stings. This rather crude method of treatment has never received much recognition on the part of the profession, and I have been skeptical of the actual importance of such treatment, but the observation of the effect of a wasp sting in this case would suggest that the severe local reaction and the general effect from so slight an amount of poison as that introduced by a single yellow jacket brings up a subject worthy of really serious consideration"

In the ordinary way this drug is administered through the mouth, and I doubt whether there is any benefit to be derived by administering it locally through the medium of bees

"In the case of wasp stings for influenza, the same may probably be said, although I have made no particular study of that matter The benefit which Dr. Morris seems to have derived from wasp stings may, of course, have been a mere coincidence, but, on the other hand, his case may demonstrate the wasp injects a poison which is more effective than the drugs usually employed in cases of influenza The matter is worth proper medical research"

My Secrets of Beauty No. 149

What the Doctor Recommends

By Mme. Lina Cavalieri, the Most Famous Living Beauty.

Mme. Lina Cavalieri.

MME. LINA CAVALIERI has an eminent physician who never prescribes drugs except as a last resort. When she complains of aching muscles he orders exercises for those muscles. Pain, he believes, can be driven away, in most instances, by stimulating the circulation.' How she obeys this advice, and with what results, Mme. Cavalieri interestingly tells on this page.

"By Mme. Lina Cavalieri."

My physician is one of the wise men of this world, and I believe that when he comes to pass on to the one or the next world of matter strange because I have acted upon his advice to take up various exercises.

[illegible] one day I said: "Doctor, I feel that I am getting too stout. I want to reduce, but I do not want to [illegible] and lose my shape. I ask nothing more than to be slender. I want you to give me exercises that will accomplish this result."

"Then stretch them." He told me that the knees should be free. When they felt stiff or imprisoned all was not well with them, and that I could cure the stiffness and gain the freedom sought by stretching the knees. It was quite simple, and I learned. Will not you also read this paper and try it?

Bend the leg quickly and vigorously at the knee joint. Raise the leg slowly until the upper part of the leg is on a straight line with the thigh, the foot, so to speak, dangling. Do the same with the other leg. Alternate and repeat ten times.

"There," I said laughingly to the doctor, as I did the marching exercise I had learned. "Presently all [illegible]."

In a few months I [illegible] and I have had [illegible] in the United States, principal Theatre [illegible] and Paris. I feel that exercise is quite simple [illegible] but what will be found [illegible] and [illegible] in the home by the fire. Begin the exercises as soon as you [illegible] in the morning.

Before leaving her dressing room and [illegible] I had [illegible] and a contracted chest. Instead [illegible] than [illegible] told me I was going into a decline. If I had [illegible] tuberculosis. But I [illegible] saved by my [illegible] my soul and power. He said: 'I cannot cure you. You must cure yourself.'

"For aching muscles of the leg imitate the marching of a soldier, lift the limbs very high and fast."

"And how?" I said.

"Exercise, [illegible] air, but with a care of [illegible] who are chronic victims to [illegible] doomed. [illegible] and half useless shoulder joints; it widens the chest space, it teaches the lungs to do their work well. It trains to right breathing.

Clench the hands, and, holding the arms at the sides and slightly in front of the body, move them behind you, and raising and swinging them slowly, make circles in the air. Raise the arms as high as you can, then bring them as low as you can without bending the body; next, holding your hands behind you, raise the arms, bringing them forward, forming the same circles. This should be repeated many times a day, beginning with eight of the circlings and increasing to twenty.

There is a state of body and mind [illegible] of mind, when [illegible] common phrase [illegible] us, 'looking.' It is a commonsense way of saying that the spirit feels the weight of the body as an oppressive [illegible] This state makes for ill health and lack of success. But it [illegible] manifestations of [illegible] and [illegible] and especially of the stomach. person, the [illegible] consciousness of the body. Perhaps I will make this condition clearer to you if I tell you that the [illegible] general debility" applies well to it. Sometimes it leads to greater weight. Sometimes to paralysis. But in its lightest degree it is uncomfortable, if not dangerous. This doctor of mine, when I complain of your American term for the complaint is "lorkiness," says: "Cure yourself again, maidmoiselle. Pretend that you are a mower." It is great release for the [illegible] to fancy yourself holding a scythe and mowing the grass that grows to your knees and waist. With the [illegible] of my room [illegible] open I [illegible] the [illegible] now, [illegible] the lush grass I have seen growing in the green valleys of my native bella Italy.

"A good resting exercise is to swing the arms backward and forward with a long, free movement.

Use a broomstick instead, or an umbrella, or a cane, if you like. Grasp it with both hands and make long, swinging movements of cutting the grass. The rising and sinking of the body, the long, free, parallel movement of the arms, employs nearly every muscle in the body, and the quickening of the circulation is at once felt. Swing first to the right a half dozen times, then to the left a like number of times. As the body becomes accustomed to the vigorous exercise the number can be increased to two dozen. I have known the exercise to cure a case of curvature of the spine at its beginning. A little girl who was growing round shouldered by bending over her desk at school was kept at home by her mother and taught to mow, always on the side opposite to the curving inward of the delicate little backbone.

For indigestion he prescribed turning my body as far around as I could, standing upright, and remaining squarely on my feet, yet twisting the upper part as far from side to side as I could without straining a muscle. Placing the hands at the sides, palms against the waist line, encourages in what seems to the beginner foolish procedure. For beneath the palms you can feel the enormous play of the muscles, and you will realize that stagnant circulation, the cause of most of the bodily ills, is being vigorously stirred. Persist in this, and in drinking much water and fresh fruit juice, and your indigestion will probably vanish.

If the hips are disproportionately large, leg circling, steadily followed, will reduce them. Place the palms at the waist and raising the right foot, swing the leg in a circle. Do this three or four times at the beginning. After the muscles become accustomed to the new exercise you can repeat the exercise six, eight, ten or twelve times. It is well to alternate.

It was this wise physician of mine who taught me self cure of [illegible] of the signs of poor circulation, cold feet. Also the exercise I am about to describe to strengthen weak ankles.

Holding the leg out before one, swing the foot clear of the ground and holding it thus lifted, work the foot up and down by means of the ankle joints. Also swing the foot round and round. This can be repeated many times a day and each movement from fifteen to thirty times.

If you are tired and there is yet work to be done, my doctor recommended this

Swing the arms backward and forward with a long, free movement, the clenched hands meeting in front and at the back being on a level with the shoulders.

It is rest through different activity.

G. S. writes: "My hair is very thin and I am not able to make it curl. I may add that the crude oil and bay rum you recommend made my hair stop falling out, but I should like to raise a new crop.

Massage your scalp every day unless the scalp becomes too tender. Avoid eating sweets or spices. I know of no way of making straight hair curly except by using irons, which I disapprove, or curlers wrapped in kid, which are less harmful to the hair.

A. R. writes: "Will you kindly advise me what to do for my nose? The least frost or coldness will turn it very red. It is certainly most unbecoming. I have used almost all kinds of cold cream, also a prescription by my physician.

Do you wear your corsets, your collars, your sleeves or your shoes or your stockings too tight? Either of these might cause your nose to be red. If not, try this lotion, which soothes irritated surfaces:

Cherry laurel water	2 oz.
Powdered calamine	½ dram
Glycerine	½ dram
Zinc oxide	¼ dram

Apply with a soft cloth or absorbent cotton, morning and evening.

Mildred writes: I am nineteen and altogether too fleshy. Please tell me an internal remedy for reducing my weight. Fasting always makes me so sick and weak.

I am opposed to obesity remedies that are taken internally, for they disturb the digestion and make a person thinner by reducing the amount of her vitality. The best internal remedy you can take, my dear, is to eat less food. I do not advocate fasting, but I do favor eating less. Try eating a third less than usual for two weeks. Then half as much as usual for a month. Exercise freely during those six weeks, especially walking before breakfast. Drink water freely, especially at this time. It will make it possible for you to get on with less food.

For indoor exercise the punching bag is useful. It will reduce the fat girl, for the extra amount of air it causes her to take in to the lungs will burn up the waste fats.

"For the heavy feeling called "loginess" make long, swinging movements with a broomstick, cane or umbrella."

"A good exercise to restore vigor when one is tired out."

"Raising the foot swing in a circle to reduce the size of too large hips."

"The POT on the FIRE" and MACARONI

A. Escoffier, the Famous Chef.

Escoffier, the World's Greatest Chef, Tells How to Make the Most Economical Yet Nutritious and Appetizing Dishes

By A. ESCOFFIER.

It is the greatest merit of the French cuisine that it enables the housekeeper to make the most whole some and delightful dishes with the least regards for economy.

In the first place, I start with the principle that the pot on the fire, a soup which is the most typical and valuable of all French family dishes. When well cooked it is equally delicious and nourishing. After that I take up some simple macaroni preparations. My friend Madame Tetrazzini [illegible] are prepared according to the [illegible]

Madame Tetrazzini Cooking Macaroni a la Napolitaine in Her Own Kitchen, According to Monsieur Escoffier's Recipe.

Family "Pot au Feu" (Pot on the Fire).

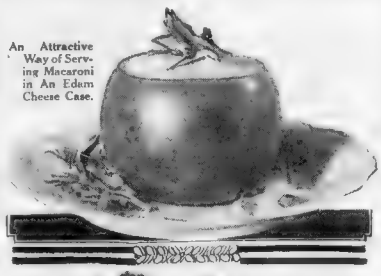
TO make family "pot au feu" you must take beef of good quality and in sufficient quantity. The favorite parts with us are the ribs, the rump and the breast. If the meat is quite fresh, all these parts furnish an excellent soup, and the beef is excellent to eat afterward.

To make soup for six or seven persons, take four pounds of beef, including bone. The piece of beef should be oblong in shape and tied up. Place it in an earthenware saucepan (marmite) or one of enamelled metal. In using an earthenware marmite remember that it must be well boiled first, as new earthenware gives an unpleasant taste to soup. Add a quart of cold water to every pound of meat and a sixth of an ounce of coarse salt for every quart of water. Put the saucepan on the fire. Skim at the first boiling, then add half a glass of fresh cold water and skim again.

As soon as the bubbling grows very strong, put the saucepan at the side of the fire. Cover it three-quarters of the way with the lid and cook gently for three or four hours. After the first hour of boiling, add the following vegetables, which must be very carefully cleaned:

Two carrots, two turnips, a piece of celery, two medium sized leeks, several sprigs of chervil, a bay leaf, a mite of garlic, a quarter of a white cabbage, an onion colored brown in the oven if convenient, and two cloves. The cabbage is optional. When the meat is cooked, remove the saucepan from the fire.

At the time of serving remove the meat and keep it hot, then remove the vegetables gently so as not to stir up the soup. Select a part of the vegetables and put them in the soup tureen with thin slices of bread, lightly toasted, and a pinch of fresh ground pepper. Arrange the rest of the vegetables around the beef, skim the soup, pass it through a fine strainer and pour it into the soup tureen.



An Attractive Way of Serving Macaroni in An Edam Cheese Case.

Estouffade of Beef (Beef Stew) With Neapolitan Macaroni.

A Roast Chicken With Macaroni and Tomato Jelly.

The following quantities are calculated for eight to ten persons: Take a pound of lean beef, cut in small square pieces; two pounds and a quarter of very ripe tomatoes, seeded and chopped up; two large onions chopped up, a bunch composed of a bay leaf, a few sprigs of thyme, a mite of garlic, the whole well tied together, half a bottle of good white or red wine, with salt and pepper ground in a mill.

Put the lean beef in a saucepan in which you have previously heated about three and a half ounces of butter, or four tablespoonfuls of good olive oil; add the salt and pepper, cover the sauce pan and let it stew. Cook it ten to twelve minutes on a fire not too hot, then add the white or red wine, cover until the wine has almost completely boiled down. Cover the saucepan again and let it cook gently until the beef has been reduced to a puree. It requires at least five or six hours' cooking.

A Dish of Macaroni With Eggs and Toast.

Macaroni a la Napolitaine (Neapolitan Macaroni).

TWENTY to twenty-five minutes before serving, cook in boiling water salted to taste some Neapolitan macaroni—that is, large macaroni. The time of cooking may vary between twelve and fifteen minutes, according to the quality of the macaroni. It must not be overcooked and must be kept rather firm.

As soon as it is cooked, drain it in a strainer with large holes so as to run off the water completely. Put the macaroni in the saucepan, add a little butter, sprinkle the bottom of a flat dish with Parmesan cheese, cover this Parmesan cheese with a layer of the estouffade of beef already prepared, arrange on top of this a layer of macaroni, on this another layer of Parmesan cheese, and finally a layer of estouffade until the dish is filled up. Serve at once.

Neapolitan Sauce Rapide.

REMOVE the little tendons from the ends of filet of beef, cut the meat in small squares, saute them at a hot fire in the frying pan with very hot butter, and season with salt and pepper. Add some hot tomato sauce a la menagere prepared in advance and several spoonfuls of meat glazing, then keep hot without boiling.

To prepare tomato sauce a la menagere, choose a dozen very ripe tomatoes, remove the skin, divide them in two parts, extract the pips, then chop them in large pieces, put them in the frying pan in which you have previously heated five or six tablespoonfuls of pure olive oil. Salt and pepper them in moderation, add a spoonful of chopped parsley and a mite of garlic; then cover the frying pan and let it cook thirty to forty minutes at a very slow fire so that the water in the tomatoes boils down very slowly.

Sauce Rapide.

You may also prepare an excellent "Sauce Rapide" by mixing a mixture [illegible] good concentrated tomato puree and one part [illegible] several minutes. Serve with [illegible] as in preceding recipes.

The concentrated tomato puree may be purchased at many stores. It is a favorite preparation in Italy.

Fisherman's Macaroni.

THE following method of preparing macaroni has for generations been a favorite with Neapolitan fishermen.

Cook the macaroni according to the directions in the preceding recipes. At the same time cook the necessary quantity of tomatoes, which are seeded and chopped up in a frying pan in which you have heated some olive oil and two or three whole cloves of garlic. Season with salt, pepper, parsley and chopped basil (bayleaf may be used instead of this herb). Let it cook twelve to fifteen minutes, then add some filets of anchovies cut in pieces.

Arrange the macaroni in a dish, powder it heavily with grated parmesan and pour thes auce over the macaroni.

Eggs and Spaghetti.

TAKE spaghetti and cook it with a cupful of grated of grated cheese. When the spaghetti and cheese are cooked, add slices of hard boiled eggs. Serve in a bowl garnished with pieces of soft toast.

Among many other excellent dishes made with this paste are fried chicken with spaghetti and tomato jelly and macaroni au gratin in an Edam cheese case.

Show Children the REAL WORLD

The Moving Picture—
The Great Educator of the Future.

That Which Is Now Stupidly Decried Will Teach the Future Millions and Teach Quickly, Permanently and Pleasantly.

Suggestions for Moving Picture Men and Educators.

Copyright 1911, by the Sunday American-Journal-Examiner.

CONGRATULATIONS to the Rev. George J. Becker of Montclair, who is to use moving pictures with his sermons in church.

Moving pictures, in education, in development of the mind and stirring of the imagination, are destined to do a wonderful work in this way.

Attacks on the moving pictures are based on prejudice. As well attack the printing press because harmful books are published as attack moving picture exhibitions because harmful pictures are shown.

Public sentiment and the police should deal rigorously with the harmful picture, as with the immoral book.

Public intelligence, public educators and public showmen should develop to the highest possible point of good use the moving picture.

In the world of education beyond any question moving pictures will do in the future a work greater than has been done by all the books written in all the long history of education.

What IS education? It is the science of communicating to the brain and consciousness of another knowledge which the teacher already possesses.

Nine-tenths of the knowledge which is really important concerning THINGS, knowledge of that which actually exists, and can be SEEN.

Who can deny that what we KNOW best is that which our EYES HAVE ACTUALLY SEEN?

The moving picture, soon to be used universally and to a large extent exclusively in the education of the child, will enable the child TO SEE that with which it is desired to make the child acquainted.

What we see is forever stamped on the mind. We have lived on this planet USING OUR EYES as men for hundreds of thousands of years. And the animals learned and formed impressions by using their eyes millions upon millions of years before man appeared on the globe.

The art of learning, of gaining the knowledge, through words spoken or written has been recently acquired. It is a system imperfect and extremely painful to the young child.

All children and a great majority of adults dislike and instinctively push away knowledge which comes to them in written form.

Yet the whole human race greedily accepts the knowledge which comes in pictures—the youngest child cries for "picture books."

When the picture is accompanied by motion, by action which intensifies its reality, the educational power of the picture is absolute.

Would it not be impossible with written words or spoken words to give a young child an idea of the strange animals that exist on this planet? You might read books or deliver lectures WITHOUT PICTURES FOR TEN YEARS, AND THE MIND OF THE CHILD AT THE END OF THAT TIME WOULD HAVE NO CONCEPTION WHATEVER OF THE ELEPHANT, GIRAFFE, TIGER, BOA CONSTRICTOR OR ARMADILLO.

But take the child to the menagerie, or let the child study the colored picture book, and SEE the animals, and from that moment the character of the strange creatures becomes a part of the child's absolute knowledge, part of its intellectual possession.

So it will be with the teaching of all kinds of knowledge in the future.

Suppose you tell a child about that wonderful machine, the hydroplane. If you are good at description you may arouse a languid interest as you tell of a machine that moves over the surface of the water at high speed, then rises into the air and flies above the water. But even then, to make the child understand, you must compare your hydroplane to a flying fish or to something else of which the child HAS SEEN A PICTURE.

child HAS SEEN A PICTURE

You may SEE, in moving pictures to-day, the hydroplane in operation.

You may have the child actually witness the marvellous operations of the strange machine.

Before the child's eyes on the picture screen the hydroplane rushes on the water's surface, and then rises into the air amid the spray. The smoke is seen flying from the engine. And to heighten the reality sounds are reproduced exactly. It is a marvellous and beautiful way to communicate knowledge. The mind apt and alert receives new truths gladly and retains them forever.

Think what a magnificent thing teaching in the future will be, when knowledge both in the getting and in the possessing shall cause HAPPINESS!

How dull is astronomy as taught to the child to-day! How beautiful and entrancing it will be, taught in the future with moving pictures!

The child will see on the screen a great blazing central sun, with the masses of fire shooting up. And around this sun will be seen the family of planets, with their rings and moons and strange motions.

The flaming comets will fly across canvas, wiping out the light of the stars as they pass.

The birth and development of nebulae, the processes that occupy thousands of millions of years, will pass before the eye of the child in pictures prepared by scientific men, fascinating, truthful.

With such a teaching of astronomy the child at fifteen will be as familiar with the marvellous universe, with the great celestial mechanism which alone illustrates Divine power, as he is to-day with the details of his father's front yard, or the painful dullness of his school room.

Those that are dull minded will object that this would be "making education too easy," and the unwise of another kind would say that "knowledge taken in so easily and pleasantly would soon go out again."

Of all the stupid things that ignorant "educators of the young" say, this is the most stupid.

Did any child that ever SAW Niagara Falls ever forget that wonderful demonstration of power?

Does any child that has simply HEARD about the Falls of the Zambesi have any clear impression of that which has been heard of but remains UNSEEN?

Does the child that has SEEN a great mountain range ever forget the impression of vastness and majesty?

And has a child any impression at all of the wonderful Himalayas of which he has only HEARD?

The moving picture will teach geography as well as astronomy. And it will teach history.

Pictures of gigantic animals moving about in prehistoric periods; pictures of savage tribes, of slave raids, of caravans loaded with ivory; pictures of the great deserts, pyramids, the slow camels, Arab tents; pictures of the northern men, Eskimos watching at the hole in the ice, the walrus plunging too late after the harpoon has hit him, the whale dragging the boat through the water with him—PICTURES OF THIS WORLD AS IT IS AND HAS BEEN WILL GIVE TO THE CHILD IN A FEW MONTHS KNOWLEDGE THAT THE WRITTEN WORD CANNOT GIVE HIM IN AS MANY YEARS.

And with the knowledge he will get happiness, and an imagination made active, a desire to see and do and be something in a world so wonderful.

Let those that believe in the old method stick to it for themselves, but let them not inflict it upon children.

In one of the outrageous Mohammedan schools where superstition and brutality illustrate the theory that teaching religion is the only important thing, you will see the unhappy children, tired, discouraged, sore-eyed, studying under a brutal master. They mutter over their religious texts, mumble the meaningless lines of the Koran and the master above them with a huge bamboo, thirty feet long, in his hand, strikes them over the head at intervals to emphasize the value of knowledge and the desirability of giving attention.

That is the old school to which some educators cling.

And it is true that with a sufficiency of blows and brutality you may compel a child to remember a statement, false or true.

But as you FORCE THE MEMORY with blows, you KILL THE MIND.

And all the blows and brutality cannot possibly produce that kind of attention, that rapt concentration which you may see on the face of a child absorbing knowledge normally and happily through the eyes from pictures.

Ruskin was the first to appreciate the great work that photography would do in education. He had striven painfully with his pencil to give an exact idea of the beauties of architecture.

Then, to his delight, Daguerre gave to the world the wonderful art of photography. Ruskin's fine mind hailed this discovery as the great culture educator of the world, making it possible for all of the inhabitants of the world to see and study the world in their own homes.

How much more marvellous and powerful is THE MOVING PICTURE, a picture that shows not only shape, but also MOTION and LIFE, and a picture that can be made more effective by accurate reproduction of sound.

Who is the educator that will first utilize to the full this new force in education?

What scientist will prepare for the public school child a moving picture of the heavens, the suns, the stars, the glory of the milky way, the beauties of the great universe to which men hitherto have lived and died blind?

This newspaper urges upon every public school department the importance of teaching with pictures accompanied by exact reproductions of sounds and by music and intelligent, simple lectures.

Geography, astronomy, mechanics, physiology, anatomy and other exact sciences can be taught by the moving picture. That agency has its place IN ALL TEACHING.

History especially will be taught in living pictures.

The child, instead of reading dry books about Lincoln, WILL ACTUALLY SEE HIM in pictures that will reproduce his life portrayed before the camera by capable actors.

The little child will be told, "Now you are going to learn about Abraham Lincoln, the wonderful man who lived and died for his country and who freed the slaves."

Then will come the picture of the little cabin, with its dirt floor, one room and one window, and the little child just born.

Then will come Lincoln the boy, studying his few books by the light of a wood fire.

Then the young rail splitter at work with his ax, or on the Mississippi boat.

Then Lincoln the lawyer and storekeeper.

Then Lincoln in debate with Douglas

Then Lincoln at the White House in council with his Cabinet. Lincoln on the battlefield of Gettysburg, then the tragic scene in the theatre and the death and funeral of the great man.

Would not a child remember this teaching throughout his entire life?

And could it not be taught in this way in one month and forever RETAIN more knowledge than it could get from books in one year?

Would not true religious faith be impressed on the minds of boys and girls with the moving picture? Does not the magnificent play "Ben Hur," which is in reality a moving picture, teach more about the life of Christ and the period in which He lived than many sermons?

The task of mankind in the future is to make the gaining of knowledge a pleasure and to make the performance of work a happiness.

And this will be accomplished before the race is much older.

The gaining of knowledge will one day be to the child a pleasure and a joy.

And the doing of work in a decent civilization will one day be a happiness and an inspiration to the worker.

These things are coming, but men are needed to speak and work for them.

MARY ANDERSON'S SECRET OF HAPPINESS

"Our Mary" (Mrs. De Navarro) Tells Dorothy Dix How She Found, and Seized Upon, and Holds Tightly, the Things Which Are Really Worth While.

"'But, madame, I offer you a fortune. You can't afford to refuse it.' 'I can't afford to take it. I can't sell my happiness and contentment at any price, and I [illegible] miserable on the stage,' I would answer."

BEHOLD the Miracle of the Age!

A Woman who has discovered the Secret of Perpetual Youth.

A Woman Who is Unafraid of Time and boasts of her Age.

A Woman Who Prefers the Simple Life.

A Star that Set of its own accord and has never desired to Twinkle Again.

A Philosopher in Petticoats who has found the Road to Contentment and Follows It.

A Wife and Mother who had rather Listen to the Cricket on the Hearth and the Cooing of Babes than the Plaudits of the Multitude.

And the name of this wonderful creature, the like of whom probably does not exist anywhere else in the civilized world, is Mary Anderson.

To my mind Mary Anderson has always been the wonder of my sex, because she has been almost the solitary woman who has had enough sense to know when to quit. She stopped just as her clock struck high noon and left the hands eternally pointing to the meridian of her success.

She seized the psychological moment in the very heyday of her beauty and fame, when every tongue acclaimed her, to throw down her sceptre and abdicate the throne by her own volition. Thus she has remained forever a glorious memory, a mysterious wonder, the unfulfilled prophecy of what she might have done had she only remained on the stage.

We have seen other actresses, who were her contemporaries, pass from leading ladies into playing old women's parts; we have seen them turn from lissome lasses into fat and frowsy dowagers; we have watched their fairness fade; their powers wane; their charm evaporate; even the fame of their achievements forgotten, but Mary Anderson lives secure in our mind in eternal youth and beauty—a Juliet whose romance is never dimmed by her becoming a Grandmamma.

Since Mary Anderson so discreetly drew the veil of privacy, while it was yet rosy with illusions, about her and retired into domestic life and married Mr. De Navarro, the world has scarcely had a glimpse of her face. Her seclusion has been real and effectual, not press-agentry. For the last two weeks, however, she has been in New York to witness the premiere of the "Garden of Allah," the gorgeous and spectacular play which she and Mr. Hichens have made out of Mr. Hichens's novel of hectic passion and sizzling desert sand, and, for once, has been visible to mortal eyes.

It was in the chaste and austere library of the Century—nee New—Theatre that I [illegible] her the other day, a gracious and [illegible] woman who admits to being [illegible] years old, and who looks like a [illegible]. Her tall figure, in its tight-fitting [illegible] velvet gown, touched with gold [illegible] throat and wrists, was as slender and [illegible] as it was at twenty; her [illegible] face, under its big black hat, covered with [illegible] white feathers, had [illegible] a mark of time on it; her brown [illegible] as brown as of yore, and her [illegible] had lost none of its liquid [illegible] used to charm us a quarter [illegible] ago. She was still "Our Mary."

[illegible] our talk was first of the New [illegible] its success, whereat Madame De Navarro rejoiced greatly.

"Isn't it wonderful?" she said enthusiastically, "and do you think we have managed to get the spirit of the desert [illegible] the spirit of those wide spaces [illegible] adventures drop into nothingness, [illegible] heart of man is alone with its [illegible] and where, if anywhere in this world, [illegible] can find peace? Until you [illegible] there you cannot realize how [illegible] takes hold of one, and how after [illegible] for a while you feel as [illegible] had been banished [illegible] holy.

[illegible] that the character of Boris, the [illegible] monk who is false to his vows [illegible] lured by the temptation of the [illegible] into escaping from the monastery, [illegible] that he seeks—love and [illegible] is tormented by his con[illegible] of the time [illegible] the woman he [illegible] to him, is one of the [illegible] creations in [illegible]. I [illegible] know whether the audience [illegible] of this—it's hard to get [illegible] effects of character across the foot[illegible] in a theatre as big as [illegible] it's necessary to the understanding of the play.'

And [illegible] the big [illegible] Boris con[illegible] he is [illegible] monk, it is not [illegible] discovery [illegible] him not [illegible] dreads. It [illegible].

[illegible] has [illegible] magnificent poem [illegible] called [illegible] Hound of Heaven' and [illegible] always in my mind [illegible] of Boris Androvsky [illegible] his conscience [illegible] Hound of Heaven.'

"Of course," [illegible] Madame De Navarro, [illegible] a woman of the [illegible] Boris and Domini [illegible] would have been [illegible] of everything [illegible] held high and holy. They would have come to look on each other as moral lepers, and so there was nothing possible [illegible] part, and [illegible] to go back to the monastery and [illegible] his sin.

[illegible] she added, with her eyes alight, I think that if after Boris had resumed his garb as a Trappist monk again, [illegible] to each other, they would have been just like the [illegible] of Abelard and Heloise—all full of poetry, and death[illegible] love and a passion purified by the fire of suffering and renunciation. I am a sentimentalist," she smiled, "and I love Abelard and Heloise, and when I go to Paris I always go to the cemetery of Pere la Chaise and put flowers on their graves."

Reverting to the "Garden of Allah," Madame De Navarro said:

"I am delighted that Mr. Louis Waller has had such a personal triumph in the role of Boris Androvsky, for I picked him for the part. I had been trying to get him to come to America for several years, as I told him that the Americans would appreciate his fine art, and, of course, we prophets are always delighted to see our prophecies fulfilled."

"Madame De Navarro," I asked, "now that you have had success as a playwright, will you dramatize any more novels, or perhaps write original plays yourself?"

"Ah, I don't know," she replied, "that is for the future to determine. I have tasted blood, you know."

"But," I urged, "you quit the stage in the very hour of your triumph."

"That was different," she remarked sententiously. "I have written one book, and I had great joy in writing it and recalling old scenes, but I did not feel that it was personal, somehow. It was as if I was writing about somebody else, but on the stage you are you, yourself. It's your own flesh and blood, your own face, that people are staring at, and that was horrible to me."

"Was that why you left the stage?" I asked.

"Partially. Mostly," she answered. "I hated the publicity of the life. It revolted my sensibilities, and eventually it grew so distasteful that I gave it up. Of course when I was very young, a girl of sixteen or eighteen, I was dazzled by the footlights, and I thought it the greatest thing in the world to have an audience applauding, but I soon outgrew that, and then the publicity became intolerable to me, and I quit the stage."

"And have you never regretted it?"

"Not for a single instant. Never once. I will tell you what happened to me for the first four or five years after I left the stage," she laughed. "When 8 o'clock would come of an evening I would say to myself, 'I don't have to go to the theatre this evening. There's no call boy going to be knocking at my door telling me it's my cue. There's no paint and powder and wigs for me. I don't have to go out and show myself before any staring eyes. I can just stay quietly here and spend the whole long, blessed evening at home,' and then I'd just hug myself for very joy at my freedom.

"Oh, I could have gone back on the stage again if I'd wanted to. I've had the most wonderful offers from managers who have offered me enormous sums for engagements. Many managers have tried to tempt me. They have said to me: 'But, madame, I offer you a fortune. You can't afford to refuse it.' 'I can't afford to take it. I can't sell my happiness and contentment at any price, and I'm miserable on the stage,' I would answer.

"Only recently I was offered a hundred thousand dollars to come to America and give a hundred readings, and I declined it. 'I wouldn't do it for a million, or ten millions,' I said. 'But,' urged the manager, 'it's only for a hundred nights.' 'But that would be a hundred days lost out of my life,' I said."

"Madame De Navarro," I asked, "you are the one woman who appears to have found happiness. What is the secret of your wonderful discovery?"

"I have found what I wanted in life," she answered, "and I have had the courage to take it and to resist the temptations that draw us away, often against our will, from our ideals. I like quiet and peace and calm, and so I left the stage with its fever and unrest, and ceaseless strivings, and heart burnings and jealousies, and I turned my back upon the hurly burly and senseless gaieties of cities and society, and have withdrawn into the hills, where there is solitude and the murmuring of brooks. There, at Broadways, in England, I have my home. There I live with my husband, my children, my friends, my books and music. There I have time to think and solitude in which to invite my soul, and there I am perfectly happy and content. That is my secret. I have found the thing that I want, and I took it, and I don't let anybody persuade me to part with it, or exchange it for something else."

And just at that moment, as if it had been stage managed, only it was an accident, the door opened and a small, handsome, iron-grey man came in. It was Mr. De Navarro, and she turned upon him the impassioned eyes of Juliet, as she said:

"Perhaps he is my secret of happiness, after all, for he has been everything on earth to me, father, mother, sister, brother, lover, comrade and husband all in one. We have been married twenty-one years, and we are more in love now than we were in our honeymoon."

"Do you know that he is one of the Cameira of the Holy Father and is in attendance at the Vatican for two weeks every year? We go to Rome for it every Winter, and it is most interesting, and," she added, with wifely fondness, "Mr. De Navarro looks wonderfully handsome, with his Spanish face, in his black velvet tunic, and with his feathered hat and great ruff. The uniform was designed by Michael Angelo, and he looks as if he had just stepped out of some old picture of a cavalier when he stands by the Pope's door.

"We are practically going to Rome from here, as we shall only stop in England long enough to visit the children. I can say, like Cornelia, they are my jewels. I have two, a great son of fifteen, who is at Downside College, a Benedictine college near Glastenbury and Wells Cathedrals, and a little girl of six, Maria Elena.

Maria Elena answers to the description of the little girl in Elizabeth's German Garden—she is three feet square and valiant beyond her years. She's the most determined little person you ever saw and stands up with flaming eyes and faces down anybody who opposes her. 'It's right,' she says, 'and I'm going to do it!'

'She is very much like I was at her age, even to being pudgy, for I was a regular roly poly until I suddenly shot up into a slim girl at fifteen. And I had Maria Elena's dauntless spirit, too, or else I should have never had the courage, alone and unaided and untaught, to have launched myself, while still a child almost, upon the career of an actress. I often think with wonder of my daring, but I had the sublime ignorance of youth that somehow seems to carry us forward. Would any of us have the hardihood to undertake life if we knew of the difficulties in the way? Or must we do what we are sent into the world to do? I wonder."

"Madame Navarro," I asked, "are either of your children destined for the stage?"

"Maria Elena is too young to have even thought of the future," she replied, "and as for my boy, his ambitions have been successively to be a soldier, to run a steam roller, to be a locomotive driver, to be an Indian fighter, and a sailor, and the last I heard from him on this subject, he was contemplating the career of a diplomat. And there's still time for him to have other loves."

Then we drifted back once more to talking of the secret of the happy life.

"I have just been lunching down on Wall Street with one of the biggest of our American financiers," said Madame Navarro, "and I was struck anew, as we made our way through the packed and jammed streets, with the stress and struggle of life, with the mad rush, the ceaseless striving, the endless grind of labor. There was not one really happy, care-free face in the whole crowd. Every countenance looked strained, careworn, tense with nerves that were screwed up to the very breaking point.

"I said to my host, 'I don't see how you stand this life,' and he replied, 'We don't stand it. We die. Only this morning a man, a friend of mine, a man who has made a great success, died suddenly. And he was a young man. He should have lived thirty years more, but he has been killed by the strenuous life we lead. We all know it is killing us, but we go on until some day we drop in our offices, or they send us to a madhouse.'

"Of course," she added, "we must all work to supply the necessaries and ordinary comforts of life, but after we have those we have all that money can give. The scramble for wealth, for power and place and fashion is madness.

"Believe me, happiness lies only in simple things and simple ways—especially for women."

And then I said good-bye to Mary Anderson, who has had pretty nearly every good gift that life can bestow upon a woman, and who finds that the best of all are just husband, and child, and home.

DOROTHY DIX.

"Isn't it wonderful?" she said enthusiastically, "and do you think we have managed to get the spirit of the desert into it?"

Alan Dale's Weekly Review and Gossip of the Theatre

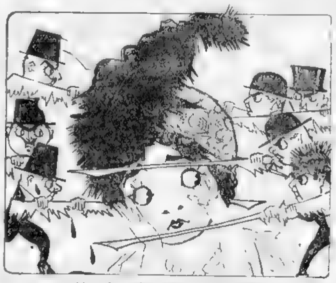
By Alan Dale.

MANY people who saw Lewis Waller's capital work in "The Garden of Allah" at the Century Theatre wondered why he had never appeared in the U. S. before. Nearly every London actor of prominence and of no prominence has had his chance here. The truth is that Lewis Waller in an ordinary play is not particularly interesting. He belongs to the "theatrical" persuasion, and that has ceased to have a big vogue. In London, where he is "established," he is a sort of matinee favorite, about on a par with our own Faversham. But in "The Garden of Allah" he shone resplendent. We sat there waiting for some acting, for some touch of the unalloyed theatre, for something to knead these lovely, eye-tickling pictures into dramatic food. And Lewis Waller did it. His impassioned utterances gave some semblance of meaning to a lifeless play. We hung upon his words because we wanted words. He was the right man in the right place. Few actors could have done what he did. He was splendidly appropriate, and at the opening performance he deserved the ovation that he got, even if the "reception" accorded to him before he had done anything at all did savor of the unnecessary. Mr. Waller himself could never have hoped for a more auspicious American debut. He might have waited for many more years before such an occasion presented itself. So, you see, sometimes it is a good thing to wait. The right play is half the battle—or three-quarters of it. In anything that Waller may subsequently do here he will be watched with interest. Had he elected to appear in his great London success, "Monsieur Beaucaire," it is doubtful if he would have achieved anything.



"The most ruthless thing that could have happened to a matured artist was the inane idea of creating a discussion among French and American critics, with poor Simone as the scapegoat."

By-the-bye, the "features" of the New Theatre have not been eliminated from the Century Theatre. The "smoking room and bar" are still all to the merry. The "tea-room service" provides "coffee, tea, cakes, ices, etc.," during the intermissions, and there are—matinee teas!

"Coffee, cakes, tea, ices, etc." did seem rather sharp in connection with the Trappist monastery at El Largani, near Tunis, and the veranda of the Hotel du Desert at Beni-Mora. Still, Domini herself had afternoon tea on a cute little table in the desert, so there is really no reason why the audience shouldn't follow suit.

Compare Lewis Waller's lucky appearance here in "The Garden of Allah" with the luckless reception accorded to poor Mme. Simone at Daly's. This was very nearly cruel. I did not see Simone in "The Thief," but I've watched her a dozen times abroad, and once in English, when she appeared with George Alexander. Nobody could reasonably deny that she is an artist, even if in "The Thief" the opportunity to make this manifest to a strange, new audience was wanting. The last time I saw Simone was in "Chantecler" at the Porte St. Martin in Paris, when she played the Hen Pheasant.

The most ruthless thing that could have happened to a matured artist was the inane idea of creating a discussion among French and American critics, with poor Simone as the scapegoat. What actress could survive such treatment? It seemed like ingrowing press-agentism. It made both sets of critics look like idiots—American critics for falling into such a clumsy trap and the French ones for setting it.

Besides, who cares? What is to be gained? It is not at all likely that Paris would be kind to our American actresses. But just think of indulging in fretful cables on the subject. The real truth is that Mme. Simone is in the wrong play at the wrong time; that she is not the physical type calculated to appeal to our audiences, unless the play be well suited; that she is not sensational, and that she doesn't load herself down with clothes. But she can portray repressed emotion, and she can do a great many things. And it is not necessary to rely on any Paris opinion. Th[illegible] [illegible] is some[illegible]thing of a back number. Its plays are dreary, tal[illegible] and [illegible]sible for the most part. Its actors and actresses are gesticulating and monotonous, except in a few instances. We can form our own opinions.

Mme. Simone herself would never have rebelled at any criticism written about her. Those that followed "The Thief" seemed to be unanimous in disapproval. The effort to make an international affair of this was iniquitously silly. Few American actors would have the courage to appear in Paris, and they would "get it in the neck" if they did. Why, then, put Paris in the absurd position of discussing the American criticism of Mme. Simone?

Say, [illegible] seen [illegible] many a [illegible] in connect[illegible] with Miss Eva Davenport of [illegible], at the [illegible] the Pennsylvania station, and I saw it with my own eyes. Little Eva had just arrived [illegible] to the street by [illegible] that Miss Davenport should take the escalator. It seemed wicked for so plump a lady to walk. Besides what are escalators for?

Miss Davenport had never made such an ascent. She was frightened. "My weight would stop the whole staircase," I heard her say. "Nonsense!" exclaimed her companion. "You shall not walk." So he grabbed her and pushed her on the escalator. Little Eva caught a stair just as it was forming. An expression of anguish, dread, despair and tragedy dwelt in her eye as she stepped back and jostled a woman of about her own avoirdupois. Her guide caught her and held her.

"I'm all right now," almost sobbed Miss Davenport, "but I can NEVER get off."

As the stairs grew nearer and nearer to the exit, Miss Davenport became frantic. For a moment it looked as though the escalator were going to be put out of commission. But her companion rose to the [illegible]. At the top of the stairs he hurled himself against the actress, forced her to the pavement, and led her, almost hysterical, into Thirty-fourth street.

The business between Bigelow and Miss Davenport in "The Kiss Waltz" isn't as funny.

Some subjects really are awfully ticklish for stage use. You see, in plays an author is not able to indulge in the psychology and philosophy that are the saving grace of the novelist. All he can do is to let the situations take care of themselves. So in Winchell Smith's play, "The Only Son," at the Gaiety Theatre, you are up against the repulsive idea of a father announcing his wife's unfaithfulness to her own children, and of a son championing his [illegible] against the father.

In a book this might have been made strong; in a play it seemed repellent. You hated to see a young man posing as a hero in such a cause. It [illegible] like a [illegible] for gallery applause. [illegible] a situation might conceivably exist in real life, but [illegible] care to see all real life on the stage. It doesn't [illegible] the footlights. The three acts of "The Only Son" are [illegible] to this theme. One [illegible] against this depressing [illegible]. And [illegible] pepper and [illegible] are [illegible] ever after[illegible]. Middle age is not [illegible] charming.

Said a Broadway [illegible] of putting up the prices of theatre seats we really ought to reduce them. We want to get the [illegible], and that is what we have ceased to do. Conditions within the last decade have changed very signally, and the masses do not go to the theatre. It is too expensive. A pair of seats at $5 per pair is [illegible] the beginning of the trouble. People used to go to the theatre in street cars. Now they've got to use taxis in order to make a good appearance. And with the post-theatre supper [illegible] a $5 bill. Think of the huge army of [illegible] no more than $75 a week. How can they afford it? [illegible] to put up with second-class [illegible] to draw the enormous patronage [illegible] of New York [illegible] commutation to pay [illegible] matinees or by something of the [illegible] theatres at cheaper rates than to [illegible] half-filled. We are on our high horse [illegible] come down from our perch and cope with [illegible] conditions. And these arise all the time. One day [illegible]

And now I seem to be advertising [illegible] Gordon [illegible] indelicate? I wonder if any [illegible] forced into quainter and more unseductive positions [illegible] is now "telling beauty secrets" [illegible] any! However, it is always [illegible] these [illegible] and I suppose there is an art in knowing [illegible] make the best of oneself. Still, I feel my [illegible] that my few frivolous remarks [illegible]. Miss Gordon says: "A person [illegible] any preparation on the face [illegible] those who know [illegible] standing in the [illegible] busy, declaiming that [illegible]

"Mrs. Avery" at W[illegible] [illegible] ordinary compound. The fact that it had been postponed once led one to expect something more than one would otherwise have done. The result was wonderfully tame. There was no object in the play, and no new outlook on an old situation. To make a play just for the sake of making a play is futile in this theatre-crowded city, where only the fittest survive. But [illegible] Miss Gretchen Dale [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] acting instead of [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] and act, I fancy it will go better with her. She belongs to the type of ingenue that is now nearly extinct. It has been replaced by the Billie Burke style, which has more [illegible]. Personally, I am bound to say I prefer the [illegible] think I am alone in my preference.

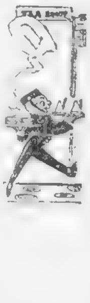
The music of "The Quaker Girl" at the Park Theatre is certainly very delightful. It is Lionel Monckton at his best. Mr. Monckton is the husband of Miss Gertie Millar, who sings [illegible] his ditties in London. He composes [illegible] and those who sing them here are not [illegible] Monckton, [illegible] the most musical comedy composers, never seems to get played out. His music is always good, and he [illegible] It all has character and rhythm. It is [illegible] English [illegible], and perhaps that is a good name for it. Don't you think it much nicer and more delicate than [illegible] measures?



The Irresistible Force of New Thought—by Ella Wheeler Wilcox

FOR fully a score of years "New Thought," or "Metaphysical Thought," has been written and talked and lectured about in America. For the last ten years it has been more and more understood, and its followers have become an army of intelligent, aspiring, earnest toilers in the great world of progress. Very little attention was paid to this cult at first. A few people laughed, a few more sneered; and the large majority ignored the matter wholly. And now comes the crowning proof that Metaphysical Thought is a great power, and has come to stay, for a PROFESSOR HAS WRITTEN A BOOK DENOUNCING IT AND EXPLAINING HOW UTTERLY WITHOUT FOUNDATION IS THE STRUCTURE!

When any idea has become so important that it calls forth a book by a professor to combat it, then indeed its devotees need feel encouraged regarding the progress it is making.

The professor talks about the "philosophy which wallows in inconsistency and imbecility," and then adds:

"There are, to be sure, worse things than 'New Thought,' and among them is its very near relative, Christian Science, for the votary of 'New Thought' has, at least, a certain intellectual liberty in following his own folly wherever it carries him, and is not compelled to submit to a degrading despotism exercised by an ignorant, superstitious and dishonest old woman. He is subject to no "inner circle," with power to bless or ban; he is not compelled to become a book agent, and he is not compelled to regard 'healing' as if it were the be-all and end-all of human life.

"The 'New Thoughter' makes, however, a most miserable use of his freedom. Starting with the assumption—plausible enough, but of course quite undemonstrable—that All is One and One is All, he adds to it the other assumption that the All is Good, and invents a 'real man,' identical with the allness and the goodness.

"Then, a remnant of sanity forcing him to recognize in some way the existence of evil and pain, he brings into the already fully occupied field two 'minds'—one conscious and the second unconscious or subsconscious—and sets them in impossible conflict with reality. Thought though obviously a function of the brain, as digestion is of the stomach, he treats with a gross and crude materialism as a thing-in-itself, enormously powerful."

I do not know how old a man this professor may be, but if he is not past middle age he will probably live to find the old, old New Thought idea of "All is One," and "One is All," the accepted belief of the whole intelligent world, and a demonstrated FACT. Science is rapidly coming into line with the theories of ancient seers, and many things which have been for centuries regarded as illusions of diseased or imaginative minds have already been proven to be scientific truths. Still more is soon to follow.

The aura, supposed so long to be the fantasy of fanatics, is now known to be a reality, and is visible to the eye of the physician who provides himself with the mechanical apparatus which science has invented. The aura in form and color, [illegible] seen by physicians, is precisely as seers and psychics have described it. It varies in size, shape and color, according to the mental and physical condition of the individual. I say mental and physical, in order to be understood by the people who have been taught to believe that human beings are dual or treble. But in reality, NOTHING EXISTS SAVE THE SPIRITUAL, IN DIFFERENT RATES OF VIBRATION.

There is but ONE THING IN THE UNIVERSE.

Out of that ONE THING everything is made by motion. The rock is the same as the man, only its rate of vibration is different. The higher the vibration, the greater is the CONSCIOUSNESS. Everything is [illegible] their knowledge. Every human being who realizes his ONENESS with the ONE POWER, and who LIVES ACCORDINGLY, is on the way to Christhood.

[illegible]

It is like blowing against a mighty gale for any professor (or bigot of any class) to preach or write against this increasing tide of NEW THOUGHT (so called).

Half the intelligent world is to-day ready to admit that thought can help or cure MENTAL MALADIES. The other half of the world, in the next century, will be obliged to admit that ALL MALADIES ARE MENTAL, AND THAT THOUGHT, THEREFORE, CAN CURE ALL DISEASES. Wrong thinking is responsible for every unfortunate condition on the earth.

Set a watch upon yourself to-day. Decide upon some one purpose you desire to make manifest itself as a RESULT.

The result to be desired depends wholly UPON HOW PERSISTENTLY YOU [illegible] YOUR CONCENTRATED [illegible] GOAL.

[illegible]

give to fear, anger [illegible] (toward individuals [illegible]) [illegible] SO MANY HINDRANCES AND [illegible] YOU MAKE FOR YOURSELF IN THE WAY OF OBTAINING YOUR [illegible].

Words are great forces in the realm of [illegible].
Be [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible] talks [illegible],
Of poverty and sickness but sets rife
These very elements to mar his fate.
When Love, Health, Happiness, and Plenty hear
Their names repeated over day by day,
They wing their way like answering fairies near;
Then nestle down within our homes to stay.

THE BLACK LIZARD OF KINAU - - - By James F. Dwyer

"The guy with the string on the top of the rock was keeping the lizard on the jump. The more the mob whooped the faster he jerked the string, and we began to count our time in minutes."

[illegible] Pacific. Those Matal ruins had been visited by a scientist or two before he came, but he [illegible] and by the [illegible] waved his arms when talking [illegible] looked as if he had struck something good

We didn't wait for the [illegible] bolted on account of the [illegible] thousand dirty knocking [illegible] diggink The sun was shut out by [illegible] and it looked as if a bar of light hadn't [illegible] into the place for a thousand years

But it was to gloom that gave us thrills. Lizards scurried through the mass of dead leaves, and when you can't see the [illegible] that crawl round your feet you get pretty uncomfortable. They put Murphy's nerves fair on the blink. He thought they were snakes and he lifted his feet pretty high and didn't rest too [illegible] for a thing a chance it made old Doc Schomberg laugh.

"Those things frighten us Ponapeans," he gurgled "Dey think [illegible]

He [illegible] Land into a pile [illegible] and grabbed a black lizard about eighteen inches long and held [illegible] squirming thing up for Murphy to inspect

It is der Kiell lizard.

[illegible] wizard men was worship him once upon a time, but now wizard men bad gone

Faith, I wish they had taken their snakes with them," growled Murphy, and every one of us [illegible] the same.

The [illegible] where they'd be waiting for [illegible] and crawling things under the leaves gave [illegible] night bad. It was all right for [illegible] had plenty of [illegible] and all kinds of rep [illegible] but it was [illegible] different. Beside, the doctor was thinking about the bulls in those old vaults and lizards didn't trouble him

It got darker as we crept nigher to trees. Sago-palm, chestnut, chatak and banyan kept out the light, but the lizards seemed to be more plentiful We couldn't hear any behind us. When we stopped over any [illegible] all was quiet and listen, but the bunch in front swam along through the leaves That's it! They swam aloft. Mackey reckoned that they had a school of porpoises all to the bad when they came to the pilot business. The Carolines, an insister more prevalent vaults than any other islands in the Pacific, and we didn't wonder when we heard the Kiell lizards scouting in front of us An atmosphere like that raises gods by the bushel and Ponape and Yap have got their full supply

Schomberg climbed into the mouth of the big tomb and struck a match; then we followed The doctor reckoned those tombs were older than the Pyramids, and we took his word for it. They looked it

Dere was high chinks here some dree tousand years ago," he gurgled. "It was a pity dot dere were no scientific men to leave a record of dose times"

The doctor had turned the first big room into a storehouse, and he had enough candles there to light a palace We were glad to get down into that tomb The rustling noise of the lizards seemed the natural we got accustomed and it relieved our [illegible]

[illegible] dagger, waving a [illegible] over his head, "do [illegible] der treasure, eh? I tief so

He had [illegible] of skulls, and the way he danced around [illegible] things would make any one believe they were more precious than the biggest shipment of diamonds De Beers ever sent out of Kimberley.

"An' dere is more!" he spluttered I was startle der scientific men of Europe mit what I've got. Shust come dis way an' see"

He led the way into another big cavern and grabbed up a white brain-pan out of a pile. I wish you could have heard Doc Schomberg throw bouquets at that skull. He started to write about it like a Coney Island barker, and the old think-box just grinned at us as if it were amused. It seems there was something peculiar about those brain boxes, and the Doc held forth about craniums, cephalic indices and facial angles till he had us open-mouthed. He traced the breeding of that batch back to the days of Ole-Sipa and Ola Hopa, the twin gods of Ponape, who were turned into kiki fish, which is taho to this day.

I think it was Mackey who gave the yell which switched the doctor off the lecture on skulls. We turned round quick to ward the passage between the two caves, and we saw pretty hurriedly what he had yelled about. A big stone slab had slipped quietly down through two grooves cut in the grooves cut in the upright pillars, and when Murphy swung the lamp there was about fifteen inches of an opening and that was closing fast.

Cameron flung himself on his stomach and drove half a dozen shovels into the opening, but the slab crunched them up. Then just before it settled on the bottom, a lizard was jerked into the opening, and the thing wriggled about in the light of the lamp as we looked at each other. We were prisoners in the vault of the Chuuk-leur kings on the loneliest island in the Pacific.

Captain Jack was the first to speak. He had snatched the lamp and raced hurriedly around the cavern, thinking there might be another opening; then he came back and examined the door

"There's a ton weight in that," he growled.

Who let it down?"

Schomberg kicked the Kiell lizard that had been flung into the cave and shrieked out curses till the place echoed.

"I was a fool!" he yelled. "Dis is der work of der Wizard Men of Kinau. Dey was tell me to clear out an' leave der skulls alone, an' I was laugh at dem!"

"You might have told us about that," growled Cameron. "I didn't think there was anybody within twenty miles of us."

Schomberg kicked the door with his boots, and then he danced on the lizard to ease his temper. The little exhibition that he gave when the lizard vine tripped him was a fool performance to the one he put up then.

"That won't do any good," grumbled Captain Jack "Who are these Wizard Men of Kinau?"

Then Schomberg let out a few things that made our blood run pretty cold. It seems that the father of all Kiell lizards had been worshipped round Metalanim in the old days, and a few of the wizards who performed the ceremonies still had a camp in the hills. They had given the doctor the tip to shift his camp, but Schomberg was skull-mad just then. You can't shift one of those scientists with dynamite when he strikes a new patch, and those old skulls with their big canine and double-sized underjaws were magnets to the Doc. He forgot to say anything about it to us, so we came along in time to share the punishment, which was just Jack Cameron's luck

Each of us started to tap round the walls, but the old Ponapeans who fixed up that vault were no jerrybuilders They had things mighty solid for the warriors who got wiped out in battle with the Yaps and the Kusians. Rock barred us in on every side, and the pile of skulls that Schomberg had gathered in the middle of the floor seemed to be grinning at our fix.

Captain Jack stopped and looked at them. "Well," he said "if another fool scientist comes down here in a few score of years he'll probably dig out our skulls and he'll get a little puzzled about our cervical indices, I'll wager."

It was getting rather warm in that stone pot, so Cameron blew out the light to save the air; then he stretched himself full length on the floor and started to chant a song about Saratonka, like as if nothing in the world was wrong. He was a cool hand, was Jack Cameron.

Presently he got on his knees and sniffed like a bloodhound as he crawled toward the door. The doctor started to curse again, but Captain Jack clapped his hand over his mouth and shut him.

"Keep quiet, you fool!" he whispered. "They're opening the door!"

Cameron was right. We slipped down on our stomachs and then we felt the cold breath of the air on our faces. The big slab was being jerked up inch by inch and we were afraid to breathe That cold air felt pretty good to us. We all edged closer to the slab, all except Murphy. He thought the brown batch on the other side were going to jerk some more lizards into the cavern and he got over near the wall and kept wondering why St. Patrick hadn't made a trip down to Ponape when he was doing the snake-exterminating stunt.

The slab stopped when it was about eighteen inches from the ground and we waited. Ten minutes passed, fifteen, twenty, but not a sound came from the outer cave. But we guessed there was someone there all right. The stone wasn't lifted up for nothing, and it looked as if the reception committee on the other side was waiting for the first head to show through

Jack Cameron hated to sit still and do nothing and he was rather doubtful about the length of time the stone door would remain open. He whispered to the four of us to follow him, and then he grabbed one of Schomberg's shovels and did a quick wiggle through the opening.

That started the picnic. Gee whiz! wasn't there a roar. A dozen of 'em made a swipe at Captain Jack's head, and he blocked with the shovel and stabbed at their shins. We hadn't a chance to get on our feet. They banged us on the heads with sticks and stones, and when we returned to consciousness we were trussed up pretty neatly, while that batch were dancing a Highland fling on the floor. Murphy said it was a Highland fling, but he didn't know much about dancing.

Schomberg put a question or two in Yap lingo, but the answers he got didn't cheer him much

"What's their game?" asked Cameron.

"Ach! Do not ask me!" cried the doctor. "I wish I could write about five hundred words about dose skulls, an' den I could die in peace. It would be a monument to my sagrifice in der cause of science."

"The devil you would," growled Cameron, and then he kicked viciously at one of the brown devils who was using Captain Jack's knees as a seat.

You can guess we didn't sleep that night. The Wizard Men seemed to be pretty jubilant about the haul, and they kept us awake by holding a lighted candle to our feet whenever we in sulted their dancing by dropping into a doze. The doctor spent the night composing a little article about the skulls that he thought he might have time to scribble down before the end came. He got Cameron to [illegible] and asking him how to spell some word of about sixteen syllables that he wanted to use to show that the skulls were high in proportion to their breadth. Old Schomberg was a thoroughbred scientist. He didn't care ten cents about [illegible] were going to do to him, and I think Jack [illegible] him for the cool way he took things

[illegible] count time o'clock the next morning when we were [illegible] and carried along under the big trees [illegible] were still dancing. The moment our little procession [illegible] hills they steamed ahead of us like they did the [illegible] and we got chilly in the blood cells. It looked as if [illegible] squirming beggars were making a funeral procession for [illegible] benefit, and it didn't make us feel good

The Wizard Men weren't particular about the way they jolted along. At a jog trot they travelled under the trees, and pretty soon we entered a valley that was blocked at one end by a sloping [illegible] that went up into the air for about a hundred feet

When Doc Schomberg saw that rock it knocked his companion stunt endways for a minute, and he groaned pretty lustily He began to think that his article on Ponapean skulls had as much chance of publication as the secret of a Yap poet

What's the game now?" asked Cameron.

Dis is der Black Lizard's Slide," spluttered the doctor. "Dey vas tell me about it on the day dey git me der tip to clear."

That's interesting," snapped Captain Jack. "It's a pity you can't write a few lines about that as a warning to others of your breed who won't take a friendly tip when they get one." Cameron was rather sore because the doctor didn't pipe us off about that threat.

We didn't ask the doctor for any information about the thing The way those brown devils went about their work convinced us that we'd be let into the secret of that rock in a short time, so we kept quiet. They laid us out on the grass, one after the other, Schomberg being nearest to the rock and Captain Jack the other end of the line. Then they clustered round the bottom of the Slide and started to chant a song and wave their hands above their heads,

Murphy started to gnaw at his bandages, but Schomberg laughed

"You git yourself drouble for noding, mine freendt," said the doctor "Der moment der Black Lizard climb to der top of der Slide you was skip for der next world, an' der Black Lizard is a mighty quick climber."

The Wizard Men let out a shout and scattered from the bottom of the rock, and the next minute we got a surprise. A big black lizard—it was an iguana, to be quite correct—was crawling up the face of the sloping stone, and all the naked devils were chanting full speed and waving him upward with their hands! It gave us the creeps, I tell you.

Up the black thing went, inch by inch, and we lay and looked at it. It was mighty interesting to us. Schomberg said we'd be shipped to Kingdom Come when it got to the top of the Slide, and that made us sort of worried about the lizard's stunt. The Wizard Men were following the reptile, hanging onto the rock with their bare feet, and yelling to the thing as if they were not satisfied with the speed he was making.

"Do you think he can do it, doctor?" gasped Murphy.

"Do it!" growled Schomberg. "Dot lizard was dead one hundred years! Der tam scoundrel on der top of der rock shust jerk him up mit a bit of banana fibre!"

It looked as if we were as good as executed when we heard that. Murphy and I had a feeling up to then that the lizard would get footsore and crawl back to his hole, but when we heard that he was stuffed with rirro grass and was hauled up by a string round his neck we knew it was all up.

"He was never fail dem," gurgled the doctor. "Mein Gott! What would I not git to be allowed to write shust one letter about dose skulls to my society in Berlin."

The guy with the string on the top of the rock was keeping the lizard on the jump. The more the mob whooped the faster he jerked the string, and we began to count our time in minutes

"He would climb up der Matterhorn in shust der same style," growled Schomberg. "It was what you American beoples call a cinch." The Doc seemed to be mad because they were playing off a dead lizard on him and trying to bluff him that it was a live one.

The Black Lizard was within a yard of the top when I turned round to nod good-bye to Cameron, but I got a shock when I twisted my head. Captain Jack wasn't there! The long, yellow grass was moving like as if someone was crawling through it, but there wasn't a sign of Cameron

I whispered the news to Mackey, and a little sparkle came into his eyes. Mackey had a wife and three kiddies over in Auckland, and you can guess he didn't like the way that reptile was shinning up the rock.

I don't think he can do much for us if he has got away," he murmured. "Look, there's the head of that blamed devil with the string peeping over the top of the slide"

I looked up to see the string taut, and just then a rifle went off right behind me, and through the smoke I saw the black head that was holding the string pitch forward and come bumping down the side of the slippery rock.

Didn't that guy bounce? He came so blamed sudden that he upset the balance of the mob who were shooing the Lizard up and the whole bunch came slipping and yelling down to the bottom, with the Black Lizard in the middle of the pack!

A knife slipped through the fibre bandages that were round my legs, and the next minute Captain Jack had jerked me to my feet.

Keep to the right and run like the mischief for the shore!" he cried. "Don't wait for me

I didn't stop till I had reached the patch of wild ginger where we had first met Dr Schomberg, then I ambled easily down to the beach. Murphy was the first of the others to come along, then Mackey and the doctor burst through the undergrowth and lay down to get their breath. But there was no Cameron.

He is der hell-fire captain!" gasped the doctor. "I was vod der moch how he got der rifle from der vault

"He's given up wandering about Jack Cameron," spluttered Mackey, "but I'm pretty thankful he stopped the Lizard from getting to the top of the hill."

We sat waiting round for about two hours, and then Murphy pulled over to the schooner and brought back a couple of rifles

"We'll have to do a hunt for him," said Mackey. "It would be hard luck if the devils caught him after he saved us."

We struggled back through the Nipaeulap and mangrove and had just started to climb the track at the other side when Murphy gave a yell and started to blaze away. Stumbling down the rocks it was Captain Jack carrying something on his back, and behind him were a dozen of those black devils we had left behind at the Lizard's Slide.

Murphy's shot sent one of them tumbling and Mackey got another. Then they broke and ran, while Cameron rolled forward into Schomberg's arms.

The doctor grabbed the bundle and laid it on the ground, and we looked and gaped. Sitting on the plaited mat was Nilloa, the daughter of the old red-shirted King of Pingelap that Cameron had set out to find!

Schomberg was the most surprised man of the four. He didn't know anything about Nilloa, and he wondered what the dickens Captain Jack was doing with a native girl.

"I was tink it was something else you haf on your back," he stammered.

Cameron looked at him curiously. "What did you think it was?" he asked.

The scientist spluttered. "I was tink dot you haf bought a few of dose skulls," he muttered "Dey was worth their weight in gold."

Captain Jack Cameron got to his feet and scowled like a Chinese idol. "Skulls!" he shrieked. "Skulls! Why, you thin-blooded, tomb-robbing, bone-measuring greasabe, it was this girl that brought the rifle from the vault and saved your hide! She hurt her foot climbing over the rocks, curse you! and did you think that I was going to leave her behind for those hack devils to wreak their vengeance on?"

He glared at Schomberg till the doctor dropped his eyes, then Captain Jack picked Nilloa up in his arms and started for the boat with us following. Cameron's story of Nilloa's bravery so affected Murphy that he sobbed all the way down the track when we were making for the Coral Queen, and we didn't blame him, either.

NAMGAY DOOLA - - - - - - - - - - By Rudyard Kipling

ONCE upon a time there was a king who lived on the road to Tibet, very many miles in the Himalaya Mountains. His kingdom was 11,000 feet above the sea, and exactly four miles square, but most of the miles stood on end, owing to the nature of the country. His revenues were rather less than 400 pounds yearly, and they were expended on the maintenance of one elephant and a standing army of five men. He was tributary to the Indian government, who allowed him certain sums for keeping a section of the Himalaya-Thibet road in repair. He increased his revenues by selling timber to the railway companies for he would cut the great deodar trees in his own forest and they fell thundering into the Sutlej River and were swept down to the Plains, 200 miles away, and became railway ties.

Now and again this king, whose name does not matter, would mount a ring-streaked horse and ride scores of miles to Simlatown to confer with the lieutenant-governor on matters of peace and assure the viceroy that his sword was at the service of the queen empress. Then the viceroy would cause a ruffle of drums to be sounded and the ring-streaked horse and the cavalry of the state—two men in Lattees—and the herald who bore the Silver Stick before the king would trot back to their own place, which was between the tail of a heaven-climbing glacier and a dark birch forest.

Now, from such a king, always remembering that he possessed one veritable elephant and could count his descent for 1,200 years, I expected, when it was my fate to wander through his dominions, no more than mere license to live.

The night had closed in rain, and rolling clouds blotted out the lights of the villages in the valley. Forty miles away, untouched by cloud or storm, the white shoulder of Dongo Pa—the Mountain of the Council of the Gods—upheld the evening star. The monkeys sung sorrowfully to each other as they hunted for dry roots in the fern-draped trees, and the last puff of the day wind brought from the unseen villages the scent of damp wood smoke, hot cakes, dripping undergrowth, and rotting pine-cones. That smell is the true smell of the Himalayas, and if it once gets into the blood of a man he will, at the last, forgetting everything else, return to the Hills to die. The clouds closed and the smell went away, and there remained nothing in all the world except chilling white mists and the boom of the Sutlej River.

A fat-tailed sheep, who did not want to die, bleated lamentably at my tent door. He was scuffling with the prime minister and the director-general of public education, and he was a royal gift to me and my camp servants. I expressed my thanks suitably and inquired if I might have audience of the king. The prime minister readjusted his turban—it had fallen off in the struggle—and assured me that the king would be very pleased to see me. Therefore I dispatched two bottles as a foretaste, and when the sheep had entered upon another incarnation, climbed up to the king's palace through the wet. He had sent his army to escort me, but it stayed to talk with my cook. Soldiers are very much alike all the world over.

The palace was a four-roomed, whitewashed mud-and-timber house, the finest in all the Hills for a day's journey. The king was dressed in a purple velvet jacket, white muslin trousers, and a saffron-yellow turban of price. He gave me audience in a little carpeted room opening off the palace court yard, which was occupied by the elephant of state. The great beast was sheeted and anchored from trunk to tail, and the curve of his back stood out against the sky line.

The prime minister and the director-general of public instruction were present to introduce me; but all the court had been dismissed lest the two bottles aforesaid should corrupt their morals. The king cast a wreath of heavy, scented flowers round my neck as I bowed, and inquired how my honored presence had the felicity to be. I said that through seeing his auspicious countenance the mists of the night had turned into sunshine, and that by reason of his beneficent sheep his good deeds would be remembered by the gods. He said that since I had set my magnificent foot in his kingdom the crops would probably yield 70 per cent. more than the average. I said that the fame of the king had reached to the four corners of the earth, and that the nations gnashed their teeth when they heard daily of the glory of his name and the wisdom of his moon-like prime minister and lotus eyed director-general of public education.

Then we sat down on clean white cushions, and I was at the king's right hand. Three minutes later he was telling me that the condition of the maize crop was something disgraceful, and that the railway companies would not pay him enough for his timber. The talk shifted to and fro with the bottles. We discussed very many quaint things, and the king became confidential on the subject of government generally. Most of all he dwelt on the shortcomings of one of his subjects, who, from what I could gather, had been paralyzing the executive.

"In the old days," said the king, "I could have ordered the elephant yonder to trample him to death. Now I must even send him seventy miles across the hills to be tried, and his keep for that time would be upon the state. And the elephant eats every thing."

"What be the man's crimes, Rajah Sahib?" said I.

"Firstly, he is an outlander," and no man of my own people secondly, since of my favor I gave him land upon his coming, he refuses to pay revenue. Am I not the lord of the earth, above and below—entitled by right and custom to one-eighth of the crop? Yet, this devil, establishing himself, refuses to pay a single tax . . . and he brings a poisonous spawn of babies."

"Cast him into jail," I said.

"Sahib," the king answered, shifting a little on the cushions, "once and only once in these forty years sickness came upon me so that I was not able to go abroad. In that hour I made a vow to my God that I would never again cut man or woman from the light of the sun and the air of God, for I perceived the nature of the punishment. How can I break my vow? Were it only the lopping off of a hand or a foot, I should not delay. But even that is impossible now that the English have rule. One or an other of my people"—he looked obliquely at the director-general of public education—"would at once write a letter to the viceroy, and perhaps I should be deprived of that ruffle of drums."

He unscrewed the mouthpiece of his silver pipe, fitted a plain amber one, and passed the pipe to me. "Not content with refusing revenue," he continued, "this outlander refuses also to beegar" (this is the corvee or forced labor on the roads), "and stirs my people up to the like treason. Yet he is, if so he wills, an expert log-snatcher. There is none better or bolder among my people to clear a block of the river when the logs stick fast."

"But in worships strunge gods," said the prime minister, deferentially.

"For that I have no concern," said the king, who was as tolerant as Akbar in matters of belief. "To each man his own god, and the fire is Mother Earth for us all at the last. It is the rebellion that offends me."

"The king has an army," I suggested. "Has not the king burned the man's house, and left him naked to the night dews?"

"Nay. A hut is a hut, and it holds the life of a man. But once I sent my army against him when his excuses became wearisome. Of their heads he brake three across the top with a stick. The other two men ran away. Also the guns would not shoot.

I had seen the equipment of the infantry. One-third of it was an old muzzle-loading fowling-piece with ragged rust holes where the nipples should have been; one-third a wire-bound match-lock with a worn-eaten stock, and one-third a four-bore flint duck-gun, without a flint.

"But it is to be remembered," said the king, reaching out for the bottle, "that he is a very expert log-snatcher and a man of a merry face. What shall I do to him, sahib?"

This was interesting. The timid hill-folk would as soon have refused taxes to their king as offerings to their gods. The rebel must be a man of character.

"If it be the king's permission," I said, "I will not strike my tents till the third day, and I will see this man. The mercy of the king is godlike, and rebellion is like unto the sin of witchcraft. Moreover, both the bottles, and another, be empty."

"You may have my leave to go," said the king.

Next morning the crier went through the State proclaiming that there was a log-jam on the river and that it behooved all loyal subjects to clear it. The people poured down from their villages to the moist, warm valley of poppy fields, and the king and I went with them.

Hundreds of dressed deodar logs had caught on a snag rock, and the river was bringing down more logs every minute to complete the blockade. The water snarled and wrenched and worried at the timber, while the population of the State prodded at the nearest logs with poles, in the hope of easing the pressure. Then there went up a shout of "Namgay Doola! Namgay Doola!" and a large, red-haired villager hurried up, stripping off his clothes as he ran.

"That is he. That is the rebel!" said the king. "Now will the dam be cleared."

"But why has he red hair?" I asked, since red hair among hill-folk is as uncommon as blue or green.

"He is an outlander," said the king. "Well done! Oh, well done!"

Namgay Doola had scrambled on the jam and was clawing out the butt of a log with a rude sort of a boat-hook. It slid forward slowly, as all alligator moves, and three or four others followed it. The green water spouted through the gaps. Then the villagers howled and shouted and leaped among the logs, pulling and pushing the obstinate timber, and the red head of Namgay Doola was chief among them all. The logs swayed and chafed and groaned as fresh consignments from up-stream battered the now weakening dam. It gave way at last in a smother of foam, racing butts, bobbing black-heads, and a confusion indescribable, as the river tossed everything before it. I saw the red head go down with the last remnants of the jam and disappear between the great grinding tree trunks. It rose close to the bank, and blowing like a grampus, Namgay Doola wiped the water out of his eyes and made obeisance to the king.

I had time to observe the man closely. The virulent red of his shock head and beard was most startling, and in the thickest of hair twinkled above high cheek bones two very merry blue eyes. He was indeed an outlander, but yet a Thibetan in language, habit and attire. He spoke the Pepcha dialect with an indescribable softening of the guttrals. It was not so much a lisp as an accent.

"Whence comest thou?" I asked, wondering.

"From Thibet." He pointed across the hills and grinned. That grin went straight to my heart. Mechanically I held out my hand, and Namgay Doola took it. No pure Thibetan would have understood the meaning of the gesture. He went away to look for his clothes, and as he climbed back to his village I heard a joyous yell that seemed unaccountably familiar. It was the whooping of Namgay Doola.

"You see now," said the king, "why I would not kill him. He is a bold man among my logs, but," and he shook his head like a schoolmaster, "I know that before long there will be complaints of him in the court. Let us return to the palace and do justice."

It was that king's custom to judge his subjects every day between 11 and 3 o'clock. I heard him do justice equitably on weighty matters of trepass, slander, and a little wife-beating. Then his brow clouded and he summoned me.

"Again it is Namgay Doola," he said despairingly. "Not content with refusing revenue on his own part, he has bound half his village by an oath to the like treason. Never before has such a thing befallen me! Nor are my taxes heavy."

A rabbit-faced villager, with a blush-rose stuck behind his ear, advanced trembling. He had been in Namgay Doola's conspiracy, but had told everything and hoped for the king's favor.

"Oh, king!" said I, "if it be the king's will, let this matter stand over till the morning. Only the gods can do right in a hurry, and it may be that yonder villager has lied."

"Nay, for I know the nature of Namgay Doola; but since a guest asks, let the matter remain. Wilt thou, for my sake, speak harshly to this red-headed outlaw? He will listen to thee."

I made an attempt that very evening, but for the life of me I could not keep my countenance. Namgay Doola grinned so persuasively and began to tell me about a big boar, bear in a poppy field by the river. Would I care to shoot at that bear? I spoke austerely on the sin of [illegible] and the enormity of punishment. Namgay Doola's face clouded for a moment shortly afterward he withdrew from my tent, and I heard him singing softly among the pines. The words were unintelligible to me, but the tune, like his liquid, insinuating speech seemed a ghost of something strangely familiar.

"[illegible]
To weeree ala-g[illegible]"

I was puzzled no longer. Again and again they sang, as if their hearts would break, their version of the chorus of "The Wearing of the Green."

"They're hanging men and women, too
For the wearing of the green."

A [illegible] inspiration came to me. One of the brats, a boy about eight years old, could he have been in the fields last night?—was watching me as he sang. I pulled out a rupee, held the coin between finger and thumb, and looked—only looked—at the gun leaning against the wall. A grin of brilliancy and perfect comprehension overspread his porringer-like face. Never for an instant stopping the song, he held out his hand for the money, and then slid the gun to my hand. I might have shot Namgay Doola dead as he chanted, but I was satisfied. The inevitable blood instinct held true. Namgay Doola drew the curtain across the recess. A [illegible]

Thus my [illegible] but I have forgotten, and I do not know the purport of even these words, but I [illegible] be that the god will understand. I am not of this people, and I will not pa[illegible]

"O[illegible]" [illegible] their impunity of the cow-maiming, raise him to honor in my army. He comes of a race that will not pay revenue. A red flame is in his blood which comes out at the top of his head in that glowing hair. The State groaned unanimously.

But if his brethren come they will surely fight with each other till they die; or else the one will always give information concerning the other. Shall I be of the army, O king?" Choose."

The king bowed his head, and I said: "Come forth, Namgay Doola, and command the kings army. Thy wages shall be no more be Namgay in the months of men; but Patsay Doola, for, as thou hast truly said, I know."

Then Namgay Doola, new-christened Patsay Doola, son of Timley Doola—which is Tim Doolan—clasped the king's feet, ruffled the standing army, and hurried in an agony of contrition from temple to temple making offerings for the sin of the cattle raiding.

And the king was so pleased with my perspicacity that he offered to sell me a village for twenty pounds sterling. But I buy no villages in the Himalayas so long as one red head flares between the tail of the heaven-climbing glacier and the dark birch forest.

I know that breed.

"'Oh, sahib, the man betrayed me; the heifer's tail waved in the moonlight, and I had my knife.'"

NEW ATTRACTIONS AT THEATRES

ACTORS SEEN IN BOSTON PLAYS THIS WEEK

CHARLES HAMPDEN, JANET PARKER, AND BURFORD HAMPDEN — AT THE SHUBERT.

MABEL MONTGOMERY AT THE CASTLE SQ.

MATTIE CHOATE AT THE ORPHEUM

As on many other occasions when he has started his own new plays on the road to success after a Boston premiere, Charles Klein expects a repetition of the past for "The Outsiders," which will have its first performance on any stage at the Majestic Theatre to-morrow night. In "The Outsiders" Mr. Klein has aimed at a popular American problem—the ethnological relation of the East to the West, and around the idea he has written a play in which advance indications give much promise.

In order to give "The Outsiders" a cast that would none the auf—r approval, several members of "The Gamblers" company will be seen in the new play, with the addition of several other skilled actor folk, prominent among whom are Frank Lyman and Sarah Truax.

In "The Outsiders" Mr. Klein shows the attempt of a wealthy Westerner to break into Eastern society, and the complications that arise are said to be unique and startling.

Hollis Street Theatre.

Frank McIntyre, now elevated to the position of star, will be presented at the Hollis for two weeks, commencing to-morrow evening in "Snobs," a satirical farce by George Bronson Howard. Mr. McIntyre has been a welcome visitor here for years and is well remembered and liked for his efforts in a great many plays, the most recent of which was Hamilton Gibbs's comedy, "The Traveling Salesman," in which he created the role of Bob Blake. He was for years the principal funmaker in Robert Edeson's comedies, and in "Strongheart" and "Classmates" made distinct personal hits. Henry B. Harris is choosing a play to act as Mr. McIntyre's first stellar vehicle, but upon "Snobs," which, it is said, gives the new star just the opportunities he needs to be funny, hinges the whole story of a dream come true—of a milkman turned duke.

B. F. Keith's Theatre.

After an absence of several seasons with F. Ziegfeld's "Follies," Billie Reeves has returned to vaudeville, and will be seen at B. F. Keith's Theatre this week. For this vaudeville tour Mr. Reeves has had an entirely new production built, and among the acts that appear in connection with his burlesque vaudeville show are Professor Burkes, the German magician; That Awful Quartette, the very little comedettes; and the Terrible Turk, with whom Reeves indulges in an uproariously funny wrestling match.

Charlotte Parry, the prima donna soprano who will appear in her remarkable puzzles for which she recently paid a price of $1,000. This piece is called "The Magic Lights." Other big features will be The Big City Four, the men of melody; Work and Ower, novelty acrobats; Jarrow, the European magician, with his great illusions, and Clemenso Bros., European clowns and Smythe and Hartmee, in a musical flirtation.

National Theatre.

For the coming week the National Theatre has arranged a laughing show. The act has a laugh. Even the great Levasseur, who will perform feats of strength, will have some comedy mixed with his act. Levasseur breaks chains with his bare hands; he lifts fifteen men on his back; holds two horseshoes together with one hand and twenty men cannot pull them apart. He engages in the most unique tug-of-war on record, with a horse instead of rope pulling in one direction and two great draw horses pulling in another.

Catlin and Penn, German comedians, agree to make the people laugh. The Six New Midgets will present their clever looking match. The Rials will be seen in a spectacular act direct from the Hippodrome of London. Morrisey and Hanlon are two boys who write their own songs and sing them. Another feature will be the Peter Lawrence trio, an organization of five musicians who are making their first appearance in Boston.

Globe Theatre.

"The Real Girl," which comes to the Globe to-morrow, is said to be a musical comedy review of unusual cleverness and merit. The cast is headed by Bonita, the lady of "Wine, Women and Song" fame, and this new production is under the direction of M. M. Theiss. This production will be seen at the Globe Theatre for the one week only.

Bonita appears in a series of gorgeous costumes, which, while display admirably, Her gowns are all that is claimed for them, for they display the extreme styles and colors that prevail this season. Low Hearts and Slim Gaddams are responsible for the fun in "The Real Girl." Rose Hilliard, a toe dancer, is seen in an exhibition of dancing that is said to be light, airy and graceful.

Castle Square Theatre.

A play of an unusual type is to be given at the Castle Square during the coming week. "The Last Word," which will be remembered as one of the successes of the many seasons when Augustin Daly's stock company toured the country with Ada Rehan at its head, is a brilliant comedy of social life in Washington, and it combines in most attractive fashion the humors of character with the emotional power of romantic drama. Its story deals with the life of John Rutherd and his discovering of his daughter because she refuses to marry any other man than the one she loves, and also with young Harry Rutherford, his son, and his scrambling to the fashionable set of the Baroness York, a beautiful and distinguished Russian lady. The role of Ada Rehan will be played by Mary Young, and Harry Rutherford will be played by Mr. Craig, who will give the youth an air of manliness.

Colonial Theatre.

"The Three Romeos" have but one more week at the Colonial, when this bright American musical comedy will bass before delighting overflowing houses. It is a matter of regret that its stay could not be prolonged, for nothing quite as good has come this way in a long time.

Georgia Caine, Ethel Cadman and the other members of this excellent organization have established "The Three Romeos" as a favorite and the Colonial will no doubt be filled to its utmost capacity during the coming week.

Plymouth Theatre.

No limit has been set to the "Pomander Walk" engagement at the Plymouth, and it is hoped to keep the play there until all the lovers of good comedy throughout Greater Boston and the neighboring cities shall have had opportunity to see it. The fun in "Pomander Walk" comes in a series of tiny electric shocks. You drop into the theatre and wonder what the people are chuckling about. Within five minutes the "Pomander Walk" chuckle gets you, too. Each time Brooke-Hoskyn cuts a caper, or Sir Peter's wrath explodes, or Marjolaine sighs o'er the dreadful wait of seventy-two hours before the wedding day, a mirth shock, as it were, passes over the audience.

THIS DAFFYDIL IS A PUZZLE TO PAWIE

"How Far Can Pomander Walk?" Was Asked the English Actor.

Lennox Pawie is greatly interested in observing how the different American audiences view "Pomander Walk." He professes to find Boston audiences keen in picking up the fine points of English comedy, though he adds that the Canadians are mighty observing, too.

A Boston friend of the English comedian penned him a note the other day which read: "If, 'The Man from Home' ran twenty-nine weeks, how far can Pomander Walk?"

"How far can Pomander Walk?" puzzled Pawie. "What an absurd question! Quite meaningless, too. No, it's not. It's a joke! They have one on the sporting page of the Boston AMERICAN, and they call them daffydills—the silly things!"

When Mr. Pawie first came to America about a year ago and traveled as far West as Pittsburg, the American habit of expectoration amazed him. A man spat on his shoes and then washed them. He apologized. The Englishman didn't know whether he was more astonished at the ablution or at the apology. It took him some time to grasp the idea that every American is polite according to his lights —even the tobacco-chewing Westerner.

"I was greatly and agreeably surprised with this country," said the comedian in his dressing room at the Plymouth. "Conditions for the actor are much better here than in England, for there he can get his salary and retain his professional standing in only one city, London, but here, with the larger cities are on practically the same plane as New York.

"In London I played in nearly every sort of play with most of the well-known managers. Shakespeare parts and musical comedy often alternated.

Shubert Theatre.

The announcement that the current attraction at the Shubert would continue there until November 25 brought joy to the myriad admirers of "The Blue Bird." And right here is another announcement of interest to the Shubert patrons. On account of the big size and the impossibility of taking care of the crowds at the regular performances, there will be two extra special matinees each of the closing weeks, namely on Mondays and Fridays of the weeks of November 13 and November 20. These will be in addition to the regularly scheduled Wednesday and Saturday matinees and the regular night performances.

Tremont Theatre.

The doubt expressed in some quarters that "Madame Sherry" would appeal to Boston audiences because the play had already been made familiar has been answered in much the same way as "The Merry Widow" dispelled the same doubt. "Madame Sherry" enters upon the third week at the Tremont Theatre to-morrow night with a record-breaking engagement, the receipts have prevailed since the opening and did fair to continue.

Lina Abarbanell has never appeared before more appreciative audiences. The producers of "Madame Sherry" have surrounded their star with a cast of funmakers among whom are Charles J. Ross, Elsie Murray, Jack Gardner, Ignacio Martinetti, Frances Cameron, John Reinhard and Florence Mackie.

Boston Theatre.

Those who have seen "Ben Hur" during its present engagement at the Boston Theatre have found that it excels in magnificence as a stage production anything that Klaw & Erlanger have ever prepared for entirely new production, built only for engagements in large cities. "Ben Hur" in repeating its tremendous success of other years has proven that has no equal on the American stage. Besides the splendid scenic effects of the present production the cast is one of uniform excellence.

Park Theatre.

"Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" is now nearing the end of its second record-breaking month at the Park Theatre, and seems to grow more popular from week to week. Success of an emphatic and unequivocal kind is indelibly imprinted on George M. Cohan's greatest satirical comedy. There is something typical of the city in J. Rufus Wallingford and his regeneration. From a mere grafter he develops into a real public benefactor.

Gaiety Theatre.

Morton and Moore, who are appearing as the Dutch and Emerson in "The Merry Whirl," will be seen at the Gaiety Theatre this week.

It has often been predicted that Morton and Moore would be a sensation, and they have proven it beyond a doubt, as everyone knows, by their tremendous success at the Columbia Theatre, New York, all last summer in the new "Merry Whirl."

Gordon and North have the honor of presenting these two eccentric comedians in a vehicle that proved their phenomenal success. "The Merry Whirl" is crowded with mirthful action, and the big song number, "Alexander Brings His Band," sung by Morton and Moore, with the greatest hoe dance ever, has proved a sensation for them.

Howard Athenaeum.

"The Gay Widow" burlesquers, a brand new organization, will contribute the fun this week at the Howard. Jack Strehl, who will appear in the leading role in a burletta entitled, "Flim-Flam," is considered one of the most attractive pairs to burlesque.

Austin & Stone's.

Several new features will be added to the curio hall show at Austin & Stone's Museum to-morrow. There will be a number of novelties in the program. In the theatre a new entertainment will be given by the stock company.

South End Theatre.

The South End Theatre will have a strong array of vaudeville artists on the bill this week. It will be a program in which comedy will predominate and will include John LeClair, the human billiard table; Springer and Church, presenting the novelty, "Who Is It?" Hayes and Allpoint, Smith and Champion, a comedy sketch team; George Ade's playlet, "The Mayor and the Manicure," with Matlie Chesley and James F. Fulton; Harry L. Clair, character impersonator, and the Wilton Brothers, comedy acrobats. A new selection of pictures will form an important feature of the entertainment.

Opera Stars on Way to Boston

MARCEL, WEINGARTNER AND HENRY RUSSELL

American opera star, the great conductor and the director of the Boston Opera were photographed in Europe before the party sailed for the United States. Conductor Weingartner is in the centre of the group with Mr. Russell at his right.

Grand Opera House.

Dante's "Inferno," one of the masterpieces of Italian literature, presented in moving pictures by a distinguished company of Italian artists, who have devoted their best gifts to the achievement, will begin a two weeks' engagement at the Grand Opera House to-morrow. The pictures have been passed and indorsed by the National Board of Censorship. The subject is the longest and most expensive per lineal foot ever registered before a camera, and describes vividly and minutely the journey of Dante and the poet Virgil through the lower regions, where they witnessed the various punishments meted out to evil-doers. The pictures are accompanied by special organ music and a descriptive dramatic reading that follows closely all the incidents depicted. There will be daily matinees.

Orpheum Theatre.

The vaudeville program at the Orpheum Theatre to-morrow will include a number of distinct novelties that are expected to arouse great interest in the bill. The vaudeville section of the entertainment will equal anything Mr. Loew has offered his Boston patrons and the moving picture exhibit will include several new films.

Waldron's Casino.

Few greater spectacles have ever been offered with any burlesque attraction than "The Fountain of Youth," which comes to Waldron's Casino this week. It is a coronation on the celebrated vaudeville sketch, which forms a conspicuous part in the offering of the "Ginger Girls." Scheduled to appear at Waldron's Casino this week, Ed. Lee Wrothe is the particular star of the "Ginger Girls."

Hub Theatre.

Elaborate preparations are being made at the Hub Theatre for the dashing Diving Girls, who will appear this week. The new water and fixtures weigh about thirty tons, and there are very few stages to-day which can carry this weight.

Coronation Pictures.

The Coronation pictures at Tremont Temple continue prosperous in spite of their twelve weeks' visit. New pictures have been secured and have been added to the original films. These views, shown in motion pictures, are unlacking the wonder of all who see them.

Scenic Temple.

During the coming week at the Scenic Temple moving pictures will be given the patrons. Two head-line acts from high-class vaudeville will be presented.

Coming Events.

Elsie Janis, in "The Slim Princess," will be the attraction at the Colonial next week.

"Daniel Boone on the Trail," will come to the Grand Opera House on November 20.

Maude Adams in her original production of "Chantecler" will be the attraction at the Hollis on November 20.

The revival of "The End of the Bridge," at the Castle Square Theatre on Monday, November 13, will be of interest to the theatregoers of Boston and elsewhere.

The attraction next week at the Majestic Theatre will be the original company and production of "Everywoman." In the cast are Laura Nelson Hall as Everywoman, H. Hoogkirk as Knowledge, Sarah Cowell Le Moyne as Truth, Patricia Gilling as Youth, Frederic Belleville as Wealth and Aurora Piari as Beauty.

Plays and Players

While there are many women in Massachusetts who are of the opinion that a heavy tax should be placed on bachelors, there is one woman in the world who believes that old maids should be taxed. She is Virginia Johnson, who is to appear soon at the National Theatre. Miss Johnson said that the women were more to blame than the men for not getting married, and that if there is to be any tax levied the Old Maids' Club should not be overlooked. She explained: "While there is more or less agitation on the part of certain women to impose a tax on bachelors and have the members of the various State Legislatures should consider the fact that the women are less to blame. The women demand too much of the men, and when they are only earning great incomes, and consor supply all the demand which style, they are set aside. If I had a daughter I would let her marry a man she loved, providing he loved her. The couples who marry for money or social position. Just stop and think, and when the drama went to the Pacific Coast as was the Ben-Hur, a part he played throughout the West with distinguished success.

Felix Weingartner, Lucille Marcel and Henry Russell, director of the Boston Opera, were photographed together just before the impresario sailed for America.

Marcel, who is an American girl, is reported engaged to Weingartner, the great conductor, and she will appear at the Boston Opera during the engagement of Weingartner as conductor. Weingartner has written an opera around a libretto chosen by Marcel who will sing the principal soprano role. This work he will bring to America with him and there is a possibility that it may be performed here for the first time.

The opera singers are arriving by every steamer, for the first performance, on November 27, is only three weeks away. The Campbell, due to-day or to-morrow, will carry a number of members of the Italian wing. Among Lucille Dolores Grill, the new premiere danseuse, Morasanzi, the conductor; Polese, the baritone; Rasadia and Romito, new tenors.

Speaking of Lucille Marcel, Henry Russell says:

"In Marcel, Weingartner has certainly a subject that would inspire a composer. She is wonderfully gifted, both artistically and vocally, and is betiaful of clever ideas. She is to sing Tosca and Marguerite in Boston this season. Marcel is proud of my assertion that American women give most promise for the future in singers. We recently took to Russia for the most interesting revelations, but do not think Russia will ever surpass the American genius of American women singers.

"I feel sure that Masterlinck will accompany his wife to America, as they are devoted to each other. They will sail on December 29 on the Olympic.

HOWARD STAYS HEAD OF CITY'S ORCHESTRA

Louis C. Elson, Lecturer, Also Retained for Another Season.

The music trustees of the city of Boston have elected the Municipal Orchestra for the season of 1911-12, and the personnel reflects great credit on the judgment of the department. William Howard, leader of the orchestra for the past two years, who has catered to the highest musical taste, and who has entertained larger audiences with his masterly performances than ever before in the history of free municipal chamber music, has been prevailed upon to reject several offers received from the Symphony Orchestra, the Boston Opera House Orchestra and other well-known musical organizations, and has been retained by the city again to conduct the Municipal Orchestra.

Mr. Howard will be surrounded by a body of musicians that would be hard to excel. Mr. Howard is a native of Oregon, having left there in 1885 to establish his future home in Boston. He was graduated from the New England Conservatory of Music in 1891 and his rapid rise in the musical world has amazed, while delighting, his musical contemporaries. At first he did concert work and he charmed music, but he ands became so great from his pupils in Boston and surrounding cities that he finally established a studio in Boston, where his success was phenomenal. Many violinists and pianists, now prominent in musical circles in Boston, and several well-known stars, now touring the country are pupils of Mr. Howard, besides devoting his time to his private teaching, Mr. Howard is chief musical instructor in the Fanlten School of Music, Boston, where his services are highly valued.

Rehearsals will be held regularly from now on, and toward the middle of November musical devotees may again enjoy the free concerts in the various halls.

Louis C. Elson, musical lecturer and critic, has been retained for another give analytical talks on the musical programs. This concerts and prove of as much value being arranged for, and the high standard of concerts set last season will continue during the season of 1911 and 1912.

BORWICK RECITAL.

Noted Pianist Will Be Heard in Jordan Hall November 15.

Leonard Borwick, pianist, will give his first recital in Boston in Jordan Hall on Wednesday afternoon, November 15, at 3 o'clock. Mr. Borwick has met with great success wherever he has played. Last Summer he gave a number of recitals in Australia, where he met with instant favor, the musical critics being unanimous in the praise of his art. Mr. Borwick is the best demonstrative of players and he certainly has a wonderful effect on the musical manner possible, without showy arm or body action or platform mannerisms of any kind.

Charles Klein, Without the Aid of Publicity's Brass Band, Will Give Boston the First Look at "The Outsiders"—Producing Plays Here Now a Habit Brought On by Success—A Dramatist Whom Sir Henry Irving Couldn't Blow Out

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

ABOUT twelve months ago Charles Frohman, to the accompaniment of much heavy music and a well-oiled press department, made Boston one of the great theatrical producing centres of the country. If your imagination was good you could almost see the streets choked with Frohman actors and actresses, who, we were told, were to share in the splendid undertaking. But your imagination had to be very good, for after one feeble attempts, in which "The Speckled Band," nearly led us to hope that Mr. Frohman would change his mind and do all his producing in New York, he suddenly took us at our own thoughts and left Boston to the mercy of others.

It was so nice of Mr. Frohman to promise so much and do so little that many of us have not yet fully recovered our balance. The reason for drifting so far back into theatrical history is simply to recall the overwhelming orchestration that preceded Mr. Frohman's promised activities. It was the orchestration that fooled us—so much noise could lead only to the big show. But there was no big show, and after a while all was forgotten and forgiven.

This recital of the unyielding past leads up to the simple announcement that Charles Klein, without any extraordinary noise, is to do a little producing on his own account in Boston, beginning to-morrow night—which proves that it can be done without mimographic boosting.

Mr. Klein's "The Outsiders," will take its first real look at the cold, uncharitable world from the stage at the Majestic, and if all that has been said about the play means anything, Mr. Klein will be wearing a new brand of smile next week.

IT'S A HABIT WITH CHARLES KLEIN.

Producing plays in Boston is more of a his name was not so well known as it is to-day.

habit with Mr. Klein than any other man in the business. The accident of circumstance started him on the road to big successes here with "El Capitan." There was nothing sentimental in the manoeuvres that sent "El Capitan" to Boston to open its career; there was only a little sentiment in the arrangements that gave "The Lion and the Mouse" to Boston before other cities. But there was real sentiment—you might call it superstition—that persuaded Mr. Klein to open "The Third Degree" here, and, taking his own word for it, there has never been any doubt about where "The Outsiders" would make its initial bow to the public.

And there you have the whole story of Mr. Klein's fondness for Boston. It is based purely on the good fortune that has been his here for the first productions, when

Mr. Klein generally does the unusual thing in his plays—but he does it naturally. You have been taught by experience to expect unusual things from him, and your disappointments have been few. In "The Outsiders" you will find him back at the old job, breaking up false notions that concern everybody and giving a lively entertainment at the same time.

Up to this time Mr. Klein has kept his pen away from society. But he has learned all that in "The Outsiders," where a Westerner with money engages to jimmy his way through New York's upper crust. Mr. Klein always hits hard, and if society gets through "The Outsiders" without acquiring a few bruises it will be because the author's pen was dull.

* * *

"The Blue Bird," which has had two weeks of splendid success at the Shubert, is an emphatic answer to the oft-repeated charge that the poetic drama has no commercial value. It is true that much that is offered playgoers in the name of poetry is dull and uninteresting, and without appeal to the great mass of people who seek amusement in the theatre, but Maurice Maeterlinck must have had his mind on all classes of people when he wrote "The Blue Bird." Fifteen years ago—even as late as ten years ago—Maeterlinck was held in contempt by even the most artistic geniuses of that day. Not even Sir Henry Irving could see any dramatic or commercial value in his works, and didn't hesitate to say so. It is interesting to recall an interview which Sir Henry gave out and which voiced the general feeling.

"There may be a class of people on this earth," he said, "who have some use for this man's books in the library. No doubt there are such people—but on the stage, never!

"There has always been a class of people in Paris who followed these freaks and fads, calling them a new art—blasphemy, I say it is, sir—blasphemy! Maeterlinck's works are not dreams. A coterie of French symbolists may see or pretend to see something in these 'Ah's and Oh's'—but for me in England, for you in America—impossible, I tell you he is impossible!

"You may write me down as one who believes that Maurice Maeterlinck has not the remotest understanding of the requirements of the theatre stage, that all of the so-called plays are nervous and questionable efforts of a somewhat disordered brain to appeal to the peculiar temperament of the hero-loving middle crowd that strains after novelty and obscurity, that he has never written a drama worthy of the name, and that he is not entitled to the thoughtful consideration of men and women who hold the stage in high esteem."

The wide appeal of "The Blue Bird"—the positive grip on both the young and old—furnishes an emphatic answer to Sir Henry's opinion of Maeterlinck's "disordered brain."

It is a long jump from Maeterlinck to burlesque, but it is worth remembering that the man who made burlesque fare among them two producers who were once able to build a burlesque entertainment that looked good enough to the big chiefs of the syndicate to be invited to play an engagement in a Broadway theatre at regular Broadway prices. This was Gus Edwards and North's "The Merry Whirl," which comes to the Gaiety to-morrow. This is a record that has never before, or since, been achieved by away distinctly burlesque attraction.

There is no better example of the upward trend of burlesque to be found than in "The Merry Whirl." It is as near legitimate musical comedy as it is possible to devise and still hold to the traditions of burlesque, and the fact that its third season finds it unchanged and still the leading attraction of the Eastern Wheel is sufficient to commend it for popular priced entertainment.

Word is passed along that the highest price ever paid for a vaudeville sketch was recently given by Charlotte Parry, of proven fame, for her new playlet, "Into the Light," which will be presented at B. F. Keith's to-morrow. Miss Parry confesses that she paid $5,000 for the sketch, so it must be true. She explains it by saying that for two years she hunted for a new vehicle, but could not be suited. Then she advertised and offered $5,000 for an act of the protean type.

"I knew there must be an author somewhere in the world," said Miss Parry, "who had the creative genius to think out a new sketch for me. All my life I had been reading about poor, struggling geniuses starving in garrets because the hard-hearted managers would not read their manuscripts. If these reports were true, here was an opportunity, for one of them to get hold of some real money."

As a result of her advertisement, Miss Parry got in touch with Frank Lynan, a young playwright, and from him she purchased "Into the Light."

* * *

The aggregate reception given "The Three Romeos" at the Colonial has convinced its producers and the gentlemen who control the syndicate that it has genuine quality, with the result that late in the week it was decided to move the piece into Charles Dillingham's Globe Theatre in New York on November 13. This should be good news to Broadway, for the piece has all of the ferocious qualities that spells second street.

Frank McIntyre's 'Don'ts' for Stars

Frank McIntyre, the plump comedian of "Snobs," has compiled a brief list of "don'ts" for new stars, which, in view of his own past experiences, he thinks should be read thoughtfully by every young player who hopes at some future date to see his name on the electric signs. Here is the list:

Don't insist upon the star dressing room until you have been a star at least for three days. It is well to impress the manager with your modesty at first.

If you feel compelled to cut out some of the plot because it hurts your own entrance get the playwright to do it for you if possible. Then the rest of the company won't get wise to why you really did it.

Don't ever come before the curtain and roast a small audience because a large audience is not present. There is only one start in this country that gets away with it, and he may be hit with a tomato at any time.

Don't stand in front of the theatre before the performance and look at the three sheets of yourself. You may not look as bad as they make you out, but people are liable to catch the resemblance.

Don't start in being sore at all the critics who fail to come up to your idea of a laudatory notice. If you must have revenge talk to the management about cutting down the advertising of the offending paper.

MISS OTIS IS DASHING ALONG IN MANY ROLES

By ELITA PROCTOR OTIS.

I have had a variety of experience in my time. It is a far cry from Nancy Sykes in "Oliver Twist" and Frochard in "The Two Orphans" to musical comedy, but the part I am now playing in "The Three Romeos" makes me more nervous than the heavier roles. It does not seem natural that a light, silly part would have that effect. I suppose it is because I am accustomed to different parts and this constant striving for ginger—pushing along getting through your lines as quickly as possible, dashing in and out—is new to me.

There are not many more fields for me to invade. I think that a black face comedian role is all that is left for me to try.

I have played serious emotional roles and villainesses; I have been a moving picture star, for I posed for Nancy Sykes for a moving picture concern; I have done straight comedy; I was the white-faced interlocutor in a black-face minstrel show given by the Professional Woman's League, and now I am frivoling in musical comedy.

We do not think any longer—we just dash along—and I am doing my best to dash along, too, for I don't believe there is much use in trying to throttle a cyclone, and I believe we are living in a cyclonic age. Thomas Edison is responsible for our rapidity—he has discovered how to do things quickly by means of electricity. So I believe he is really responsible for musical comedies and other rapid things.

It was here in Boston that the late John Stetson lured me away from a happy home to the glamor of a stage career. During an interview with Mr. Stetson I laughed at something he said and received the first offer to go on the stage because of my laugh. I did not take it seriously at first, but the offer was repeated, and I finally agreed to play the second part in "The Crust of Society."

"In eight weeks I was playing the star role, and ever after that, when the managers would get a play with a terrible villainess in it, they would say: "Here is a real Elita Proctor Otis part," and send for me. So I have been a terrible villainess—on the stage—and lived most of the time quietly with my mother and was exceedingly tame.

You know, I lived for some time in Paris, and my villainess was the refined villainess that one sees in the French capital. Up to the time I began playing wicked women parts the common idea of a villainess had been a person who spoke bad English, smoked cigarettes, put her feet on the table and was exceedingly vulgar. But in Paris I had seen the other type—the well-bred woman, who knew how to behave as well as a society lady, and this was the woman I took as my model. There are a lot of adventuresses, by the way, on the crust of society, some on the lower crust and a few on the upper crust, too. They swim up.

Charles Klein, Without the Aid of Publicity's Brass Band, Will Give Boston the First Look at "The Outsiders"—Producing Plays Here Now a Habit Brought On by Success—A Dramatist Whom Sir Henry Irving Couldn't Blow Out

By NICHOLAS YOUNG.

ABOUT twelve months ago Charles Frohman, to the accompaniment of much heavy music and a well-oiled press department, made Boston one of the great theatrical producing centres of the country. If your imagination was good you could almost see the streets choked with Frohman actors and actresses, who, we were told, were to share in the splendid undertaking. But your imagination had to be very good, for after one feeble attempt, in which "The Speckled Band," nearly led us to hope that Mr. Frohman would change his mind and do all his producing in New York, he suddenly took us at our own thoughts and left Boston to the mercy of others.

It was so nice of Mr. Frohman to promise so much and do so little that many of us have not yet fully recovered our balance. The reason for drifting so far back into theatrical history is simply to recall the overwhelming orchestration that preceded Mr. Frohman's promised activities. It was the orchestration that fooled us—so much noise could lead only to the big show. But there was no big show, and after a while all was forgotten and forgiven.

This recital of the unyielding past leads up to the simple announcement that Charles Klein, without any extraordinary noise, is to do a little producing on his own account in Boston, beginning to-morrow night—which proves that it can be done without mimeographic boosting.

Mr. Klein's "The Outsiders," will take its first real look at the cold, uncharitable world from the stage at the Majestic, and if all that has been said about the play means anything, Mr. Klein will be wearing a new brand of smile next week.

IT'S A HABIT WITH CHARLES KLEIN.

Producing plays in Boston is more of a habit with Mr. Klein than any other man in the business. The accident of circumstance started him on the road to big success here with "El Capitan." There was nothing sentimental in the manoeuvres that sent "El Capitan" to Boston to open its career; there was only a little cautious arrangements that gave "The Lion and the Mouse" to Boston before other cities. But there was real sentiment—you might call it superstition—that persuaded Mr. Klein to open "The Third Degree" here, and, taking his own word for it, there has never been any doubt about where "The Outsiders" would make its initial bow to the public.

And there you have the whole story of Mr. Klein's fondness for Boston. It is based purely on the good fortune that has been here for the first productions, when is an emphatic answer to the oft-repeated charge that the poetic drama has no commercial value. It is true that much that is offered players in the name of poetry is dull and uninteresting, and without appeal to the great mass of people who seek amusement in the theatre, but Maurice Maeterlinck must have had his mind on all classes of people when he wrote "The Blue Bird." Fifteen years ago—even as late as ten years ago—Maeterlinck was held in contempt by even the most artistic producers of that day. Not even Sir Henry Irving could see any dramatic or commercial value in his works, and didn't hesitate to say so. It is interesting to recall an interview which Sir Henry gave out and which voiced the general feeling. "There may be a class of people on this earth," he said, "who have some use for this man's books in the library. No doubt there are such people—but on the stage, never!

"There has always been a class of people in Paris who followed these freaks and fads, calling them a new art—blasphemy, I say it is, sir—blasphemy! Maeterlinck's works are not dramas. A coterie of French symbolists may see or pretend to see something in these 'Ah's and Oh's'—but for us in England, for you in America—impossible, I tell you he is impossible!

"You may write me down as one who believes that Maurice Maeterlinck has not the remotest understanding of the requirements of the theatre stage, that all of his so-called plays are nervous and questionable efforts of a somewhat disordered brain to appeal to the peculiar temperament of the bewildered exotic crowd that strains after novelty and obscurity, that he is not a dramatic writer, a writer worthy of the name, and that he is not entitled to the thoughtful consideration of men and women who hold the stage in high esteem."

The wide appeal of "The Blue Bird"—its positive gifts on both the young and old—furnishes an emphatic answer to Sir Henry's opinion of Maeterlinck's "disordered brain."

It is a long jump from Maeterlinck to burlesque, but it is worth remembering that the men who make burlesque have among them two producers who were once able to build a burlesque entertainment that looked good enough to the big chiefs of the syndicate to be invited to play an engagement in a Broadway theatre at regular Broadway prices. This was Gordon and North's "The Merry Whirl," which comes to the Gaiety to-morrow. This is a record that has never before, or since, been achieved by away distinctly burlesque attraction.

There is no better example of the upward trend of burlesque to be found than in "The Merry Whirl." It is as near legitimate musical comedy as it is possible to devise and still hold to the traditions of burlesque, and the fact that its third season finds it unchanged and still the leading attraction of the Eastern Wheel is sufficient to commend it for popular priced entertainment.

Word is passed along that the highest price ever paid for a vaudeville sketch was recently given by Charlotte Parry, of prissy fame, for her new playlet, "Into the Light," which will be presented at B. F. Keith's to-morrow. Miss Parry confessed that she paid $5,000 for the sketch, as it must be true. She explains it by saying that for two years she hunted for a new vehicle, but could not be suited. Then she advertised and offered $5,000 for an act of the prissy type.

"I knew there must be an author somewhere in the world," said Miss Parry, "who had the creative genius to think out a new sketch for me. All my life I had been reading about poor, struggling geniuses starving in garrets because the hard-hearted managers would not read their manuscripts. If these reports were true, here was an opportunity for one of them to get hold of some real money."

As a result of her advertisement, Miss Parry got in touch with Frank Lyman, a young playwright, and from him she purchased "Into the Light."

The agreeable reception given "The Three Romeos" at the Colonial has convinced its producers and the gentlemen who control the syndicate that if her genuine quality, with the result that late in the week it was decided to move the piece into Charles Dillingham's Globe Theatre in New York on November 13. This should be good news to Broadway, for the piece has all of the frivolous qualities that spell second street.

Frank McIntyre's 'Don'ts' for Stars

Frank McIntyre, the plump comedian of "Bunco," has compiled a brief list of "don'ts" for new stars, which, in view of his own past experiences, he thinks should be read thoughtfully by every young player who hopes at some future date to see his name on the electric signs. Here is the list:

Don't insist upon the star dressing room until you have been a star at least for three days. It is well to impress the manager with your modesty at first.

If you feel compelled to cut out some of the plot because it hurts your own entrance get the playwright to do it for you if possible. Then the rest of the company won't get wise to why you really did it.

Don't ever come before the curtain and roast a small audience because a large audience is not present. There is only one star in this country that gets away with it, and he may be hit with a tomato at any time.

Don't stand in front of the theatre before the performance and look at the three sheets of yourself. You may not look as bad as they make you out, but people are liable to catch the resemblance.

Don't start in being sore at all the critics who fail to come up to your limited laudatory notice. If you must have revenge talk to the management about cutting down the advertising of the offending paper.

MISS OTIS IS DASHING ALONG IN MANY ROLES

By ELITA PROCTOR OTIS.

I have had a variety of experience in my time. It is a far cry from Nancy Sykes in "Oliver Twist" and Frochard in "The Two Orphans" to musical comedy, but the part I am now playing in "The Three Romeos" makes me more nervous than the heavier roles. It does not seem natural that a light, silly part would have that effect. I suppose it is because I am accustomed to different parts and this constant striving for ginger—pushing along getting through your lines as quickly as possible, dashing in and out—is new to me.

There are not many more fields for me to invade. I think that a black, face comedian role is all that is left for me to try.

I have played serious emotional roles and villainesses; I have been a moving picture star, for I posed for Nancy Sykes for a moving picture concern; I have done straight comedy; I was the white-faced interlocutor in a black-face minstrel show given by the Professional Woman's League, and now I am frivoling-in musical comedy.

We do not think any longer—we just dash along—and I am doing my best to dash along, too, for I don't believe there is much use in trying to throttle a cyclone, and I believe we are living in a cyclonic age. Thomas Edison is responsible for our rapidity—he has discovered how to do things quickly by means of electricity. So I believe he is really responsible for musical comedies and other rapid things.
